THE FUTILE RACE CRY.

Those who attended the Borden meeting in St. John need not be reminded that the speaking was altogether free from sectionalism. Nothing was spoken which could not have been said in any part of Canada either in English or French. The Dunby stating that the government had introduced party politics into the militia, and had driven out of the country one of the best of British generals. There was not a hint that the race question had anything to do with the transaction, as it certainly had not since the offending ministers were both English, and the trouble arose over the organization of an English the French corps on account of his ter will be enthusaistic.
