DELAVAL O'DORNEY: AN AUTO-BIOGRAPHY. (Continued.) "The voice of public opinion could not be altogether stifled. I was given to understand, in a manner which not even all the art and polish of official politeness could divert of its deep offensiveness, that Lady Warremore could not be received at the court of St. James's."

supportable, I left Pisa, and upon doing so, I assumed, instead of my proper title, the collateral name of Count, for some years after these dark events, and resided in different parts of Italy, but seldom for any length of time in one place. I would have returned to England, but there the public mind, by the aid of an unscrupulous and licentious press, had been grossly abused and prejudicially against me.

The morning of that dreadful interview found me the victim of a delirious fever. My recovery was long and doubtful, and a fortnight had rolled away under its burning influence, before I awoke to a full sense of my desolation and misery. Still at times I persuaded myself that my feverish brain deceived me, and that what I counted as the sensations of memory were only hideous phantasms of some horrible dream. I called Nicolò—poor boy, he had scarcely ever left my bedside—and I questioned him, only to confirm my misery. Count St. Maurice had, indeed, been with me—he had not called since—I began to recall the substance of our interview. I ordered Nicolò to make inquiries for the Count at the Marchese de Castenova's. He was not long absent, for the way was familiar to him. All was true; the windows and verandas of the palazzo were closed, the family had left Naples on a tour, and it was believed that the Count and the Lady St. Maurice had accompanied them.

My mind was too fully occupied with my own gloomy thoughts to pay much regard to the scene, however lovely, through which we passed; but, towards the evening, we entered a secluded valley, so beautifully situated that involuntarily I was wiled away from my dark meditations, and paused to contemplate the tranquil beauty of the scene which opened before me. Beyond the heights which confined the valley, the snowy sides of cloud-capt Etna were towering in the distance, in the bosom of the vale itself lay a scattered hamlet; here and there were seen picturesque in the bright drosses of their chimney, making their sooty gossamer and alpine driving towards their flocks to fold—It was one of those peculiar scenes on which the mind, and above all, the sorrowful mind yearning, loves to dwell, and I was giving up myself to and tender musing, when the noise, which told a chapel bell some painful on my ear. It came from a rustic oratory, which crowned one of the neighbouring hills, and I could not be ignorant as to the nature of those sounds, so life in union with the smiling aspect of external nature. "Ay, I thought I," I said, "I could not be ignorant as to the nature of those sounds, so life in union with the smiling aspect of external nature. "Ay, I thought I," I said, "I could not be ignorant as to the nature of those sounds, so life in union with the smiling aspect of external nature."
