THE CHRISTMAS GIFT. BY M. D. BRINE,

Around the Christmas tree we stood,
And watched the children's faces.
As they their little gifts received
With childish airs and graces,
We grown folks had our share of fun
In making wee ones merry,
And laughed to see the juveniles
Kiss'neath the "holly berry."
Beside me sat sweet Bessie Moore,
A lovely dark-eyed maiden,
While near her stood our little Eve,
Her arms with love-gifts laden, Her arms with love-gifts laden, Until around the room she went,
The blue-eyed baby, shyly,
And blushing red, into each lap

But when to me the darling came
All empty-handed was she,
And when I asked, "Why slight me thus?"
She answered, "Oh because we—
We dinna know you turming here!"
And then, with blue eyes shining,
To Reserve wide she want her arms To Bessie's side she went, her arms

To Bessie's side she went, her arms
Her sister's neck entwining.

"But something I must have," said I,

"My Christmas night to gladden."
A shade of thought the baby face A snade of thought the baby lace
Seemed presently to sadden,
Till all at once, with gleeful laugh—
"Oh! I know what I do, Sir!
I've only sister Bessie left,

But I'll div her to you, Sir!" Amid the laugh that came from all

Amid the laugh that came from all I drew my new gift to me.

While with flushed cheeks her eyes met mi And sent a thrill all through me.

"Oh! blessed little Eve!" cried I;

"Your gift I welcome gladly!"
The little one looked up at me,
Half wonderingly, half sadly.
Then to her father straight I turned,
And humbly asked his blessing
Unon my Christmas gift, the while And humbly asked his blessing
Upon my Christmas gift, the while
My long-stered hopes confessing.
And as his aged hands were raised
Above our heads, bowed lowly;
The blessed time of Christmas ne'er
Had seemed to me so holy.

A lady who fain would be included among the "upper ten thousand," of New York, issued four hundred cards for a ball, which was to have been given one evening last week. Twenty-four ladies and gentlemen were present. This is called a snub!

The New York Sun had an article the other day headed, "Mr. Beecher's doubts of the truth of religion, and how he overcomes them." The man who could not overcome all such doubts, on a salary and requisites of $40,000, must be a greater doubter than was St. Thomas himself.

He has already done much for the starved and miserably clad little waifs; the city in quest of new victims of ill treatment belonging to this defenceless, hard-used class, he has more than once been in danger from the violence of the exasperated masters. Only a week ago he was assailed by two padroni, whose profitable business he had recently sought to cripple by securing the release of their little white slaves from thraidom.

little white slaves from thraldom.

At about 4 o'clock Monday afternoon, while the snow and sleet were coming down, and warmly clad pedestrians were hurrying through the blinding storm, Signor Moreno found near the Chambers street doorway of Stewart's store two little Italian children almost dead with cold. One was a boy of six, the other a girl of eight years. They had been begging since 11 o'clock, but had become so weak from cold and want of food that they were forced to crouch into the nearest corner that offered to protect them from the storm. Their clothing had frozen stiff to their bodies, and they were fast lapsing into a state of unconsciousness.

fast lapsing into a state of unconsciousness.

Taking in the situation at a glance, Signor Moreno tried to rouse the little ones, and got the girl upon her feet; but the boy could not rise. Leaving the children for a moment, Signor Moreno hurried to Broady ay where he hailed Officer Smith, of the Brooklyn squad, and with his ald carried the children to the Chambers street police station. Here they were kindly received and tenderly cared for by Capt. Williamson and his men, and in an hour or two they were dry and warm, and no longer hungry.

Pepin, the boy, is interesting, brighteyed, and intelligent. His sister, Angiolina, is plain faced, very quiet, but by no means dull. She was suffering intensely last night with a pain in the face, but not a word of complaint escaped her. She had learned patience in the school of bitter experience—the school in which pain is endured in silence, because it is better than the agony which is sure to follow sooner or later.

The children were brought from Italy about four months ago. They were stolen from their parents, the kidnapper hiring them to the padrone, Antonio Barbieri, who lives at 5 Park street. The wee victums of his brutality will be taken before Justice Bixby in the Tombs Police Court to-day.
