LONDON, May 27, p. m.

Moody and Sankey continue revival meetings daily. There is no diminution in the number of the people who gather to hear them. Among the hearers yesterday were the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Cairns, the Earl of Cavan and many clergymen.

Advices from Rio Janeiro report that the monetary panic in that city is subsiding.

BOULOGNE, May 27.

Paul Boyton entered the water here at 2.15 oclock this afternoon and immediately started for Cape Grisnez. An immense crowd of people witnessed his departure. He labors under the disadvantage of an adverse wind.

LONDON, May 27—Evng.

PAUL BOYTON

left Boulogne at 2.15 p. m. for Cape Grisnez, landed at Andreamles at 6.16 p. m.—two-thirds the distance, and started again for the Cape.

NOTICE.

Saint John, N. B., 27th May, 1875.

THE Executive Committee of the Merchants of Saint John, in order to carry out the object with the meeting of the 9th of April last had in view, viz: to make the labor of this port free from the trammel of any Society, have asked the shippers of this port to agree that no Society men shall be employed in loading or lightering cargo for ships chartered by them after this date, and to insert the following clause in all charters made by them after this date:

"Captain guarantees that no member of 'The Laborers' Benevolent Association' shall be employed by him, or by any one for him, at loading or loading his cargo," and the undersigned shippers hereby agree accordingly.

Second Edition.

THE PORTLAND CONFLAGRATION.

The origin of the fire cannot be ascertained. It originated around Kettle's Brewery, from there it spread to the house of Mr. Alex. Rankin, then to St. Luke's Church, and after this had got under way spread to the eastward and across to Sawdust street. To the eastward of the church, on Main street were the houses of Mrs. Corbett, and Zachariah Roberts, Denis Murphy, John Cain and John Foley. There it met the Black Spring Road, but after crossing this it took the houses of Messrs. Riley, P. McCarthy, McNaughton and McDermott. The large house of Count DeBury, on the corner of Main and Sawdust streets, and the double house of Mr. Brown were all that were on the west side of Sawdust street. On the eastern corner of Main and Sawdust streeets was the house of John Barron. This was one of the first to be consumed after the fire began to spread. From this house the fire took the houses of Mrs. Horsford, Charles Nevins, McNaughton, Andrew Turner, John Gray, Wm. Hamilton, widow McGirr, George Brocken, two houses of Patrick Maloney, and one each of Joseph McCue, John McBeth, Mrs. Keefe, Wm. Gavin, Patrick Maloney and James McDade.

These compose the eastern side of Sawdust street, from Main street to Chesley's Foundry.

Chesley's Foundry caught about one o'clock and was soon consumed.

The fire then spread by sparks to the Straight Shore road. There it consumed the workshop, moulding loft, shed and small saw mill in the shipyard of Hilyard Bros. A ship was in frame in the yard of Mr. Walter Brown and this catching fire was also destroyed.

The fire spread along the Straight Shore road from Hazen street to Sheriff street, crossing the houses of Mrs Watts, Wm. McCarthy, Porter, McMulken and Hilton.

At three o'clock it was spreading, and bade fare to sweep along the Straight Shore road and take everything before it.

The sparks alighting on Navy Island set all its houses on fire, and they were burned to the ground. They were small structures inhabited by fishermen.

Several times it was reported that Carleton had broken out into a flame but at the hour of sending this edition to press no serious fire was believed to exist there. The inhabitants were making every exertion, but whether they could succeed in preventing the threatened destruction was a matter of doubt.

At 2.30 the fire had also spread to houses on the Bridge Road. The one on the corner of that road and Main street, belonging to John V. Roberts, had been destroyed, and the elegant residences of Messrs. T. B. Barker and D. V. Roberts were in course of destruction.

The block to the eastward of Sawdust street was not a solid one, but had a large space of green field in the rear of the houses. This circumstance prevented probably the immediate destruction of everything between Sawdust street and Orange Corner.

It is impossible to estimate the damage, or to arrive at any approximate value of the insurance. Many of the buildings were insured, and there is no doubt that some of the companies will suffer severely.

The fire is still spreading, but the worst of it is probably past. The city fire department is working hard and will endeavor to prevent its spread up Sheriff street.

Thousands of people throng the streets. Carts, piled with furniture, are being driven in every direction, and goods and furniture, of all kinds, are lying around the streets. The women who have been turned out of doors, and some of whom have lost all they possessed, add to the sadness of the scene.

The buildings destroyed were, as a rule two-story wooden edifices, of a substantial character. There were few shops, nearly all the dwellings being used as residences. Some of them were tenement houses, and it is therefore a hard matter to estimate how many people are turned out of doors.

There were a number of narrow escapes from death in the burning houses, and a number of people have been more or less injured by falling timbers, &c. One man, a blacksmith named Welsh, was badly hurt by a falling chimney. The bricks struck him on the thigh and made a gaping wound which will disable him for some time. It is probable there were many other accidents which are not yet known.

The engines found hard work to get sufficient water, but in any case the fire was so fanned by the wind that it must have taken its course. Nothing could stop its course among the dry wooden buildings, and like yesterday's fire in Carleton it burned until the harbor stayed its further progress.

As near as could be judged about 50 houses had been burned at 3 o'clock.
