IRISH AND SOUTCH LOYALTY.—When George IV. went to Ireland, one of the "pinintry," delighted with his affability to the crowd on landing, said to the toll-keeper, as the king passed through, "Och, new, an' His Majesty, God bless him, never paid the turnpike; how's that?" O, how I loved the shadows
That clung to that silent roof,
Day-dreams wove with the quiet,

Admired the knots in the boarding,
And rolled in the billows of hay.
