ALAS, THE POOR PATIENT WHEN DOCTORS DISAGREE

Three of the Learned Who Differ on the Treatment of Peritonitis.

Toronto, June 2.—"When doctors differ, alas, for the poor patient."

That the highest medical authorities in the land can differ entirely as to their methods of treatment, and each prove the other fellow to be wrong, was shown clearly at the meeting of the Ontario Medical Association, held in Toronto, when Dr. J. B. Deaver, of Philadelphia, read a paper on the treatment of Diffuse Peritonitis. He is said to be the greatest living authority on this disease, or one of the greatest, and was heartily applauded by the two hundred or so doctors present.

Shorn of all professional terms, the doctor proved and quoted hundreds of cases as evidence that the only possible safety for the public lay in the doctor "operating early, wiping, not washing out, the affected parts, giving morphine, and leaving the patient alone to get well himself."

An enthusiastic burst of applause greeted the doctor's closing statements, and then a cry of "Hail, hail, come cries of 'Dr. Ross! Dr. Ross!'"

Fine, But All F. Ross, of Toronto, took the floor.

A fine paper that of Dr. Deaver's but all wrong. The only possible safety for the public lay in the doctor washing the affected parts. Who ever heard of a laundress trying to wipe the clothes clean? All utter nonsense, they must be washed, (loud applause.) And as for not giving morphine, for the life of him he couldn't see why not. He gave it right along, and always got excellent results. He wouldn't do without it, in fact, in spite of Dr. Deaver's assertions (more applause.) And, as for leaving the patient alone to get well himself, why, if Dr. Deaver's patients got well, it was in spite of, and not because of, his treatment.

"In short, when my turn comes to have diffuse peritonitis, I hope Dr. Deaver will not be in attendance." (Cheers and laughter.)

Still Another View.

Dr. Bruce, of the Toronto General Hospital, thought that Dr. Deaver's paper was a masterpiece, but still he must differ with both that authority and Dr. Ross. How could a patient ever hope to get well if the wound isn't "drained," as both the doctors named stated must not be the case? They did it all along at the hospital, and got splendid results."

Other learned members of the profession told of "the very best and only way" of treating the poor, suffering patient, all arguing, however, that there was still a lot to learn on the subject.

It is sufficient for some people that they drink anything called tea. Others prefer a standard brand like "Salada," which has a reputation for being good. The latter get more enjoyment out of life. In buying tea for the satisfaction you expect to get from its use, it will pay to purchase "Salada." Avoid anything "just as good." Imitations are invariably of poor quality.

HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE CHURCH

Speakers at London Conference Favor a Sincere Search for Truth.

SPLENDID ADDRESSES

Delivered by Rev. Mr. Dougall and Professor Bowles Yesterday Evening.

The educational anniversary meeting of the London Conference held last night was one of the best meetings of the session. The speakers took as the dominant note of their discourse that to attempt to curb the search for truth because of any fear that such search would lead to a loss of faith would be like attempting to curb the search for truth because of any fear that such search would lead to a loss of faith.

The first speaker of the evening was Rev. H. S. Dougall, of Goderich. Mr. Dougall spoke of the reasons why support should be given the institution of higher education.

It was not that there was any virtue in a college degree, nor did it lend prestige. The only things that could do that was the brain and the worth of the man himself. The college education is not everything. It may be like a house built on a pile of straw, ornamental, but not in any way useful.

I know a man who says he graduated from the university of the day, and he believed because he thought that not to do so would be to dishonor God's word. And some of us are forcing ourselves to believe things for the very same reason. But no man need have such fear, for in those things which our hearts realize, there our faith abides and not elsewhere.

College Life.

"People fear that college life militates against religious zeal. But I tell you college is the most unlikely place on the face of the earth for anyone to lose his religion. I am sorry for the young man who does lose his faith at college, because when he does he will not be one extenuating circumstance at the day of judgment. I am confident that the environment will only do so much good to him. How could it be otherwise with the warm hearts who are there?"

"Some people claim that we are substituting intellect for spiritual power. But college cannot make a man a saint. It can only make a man a scholar. It can give him the gifts and graces of God, but it cannot give him the gifts of God. And then, too, I think that this idea of opposing the intellectual and the spiritual is a false ideal."

"Others have the idea that we are tending to make preachers all alike; in stock sizes only. All this comes from the notion that some people have that a student is a sort of tub to be filled with knowledge. But remember he won't take it unless he has the power to say 'Why?' to reason out the cause of things? He learnt it in his first day in the kindergarten. Doubts are everywhere in the atmosphere, in books, in the newspapers. You can't shut them out. You must give him the strength to face these questions for himself. And this is the professor who is not fearless and honest in his exposition of the truth gathered in respect from any man."

Another Argument.

"Another argument urged against the college is that it puts the man out of touch with his congregation. And there is a germ of truth in this. But I believe it is not as likely as with the man who has educated himself. Mr. Floreffe, who spent some weeks studying the American colleges, told me that the life of the American colleges was the life of the nation. For there you find the true spirit of brotherliness, with nothing of the false boundaries of caste. And there isn't a college that is not helping up the ideal of service as the only one worth struggling for. College isn't for the disservice, but for the establishment of faith. You would not have any unified idea of truth without these institutions and the church and the college must go hand in hand."

Prof. Bowles.

Rev. Prof. Bowles, of Victoria College, the next speaker, opened his remarks with a few references to the place which his alma mater played in the life of every true student.

"I am persuaded," said Prof. Bowles, "that there is not that full confidence between the college and the church which we devoutly pray for, and which would be for the best interests of both the college and the church, and for that reason I am glad to be able to speak to you tonight."

"It is not for me or anyone to arrogate to himself the power to judge of these things. I come in a more human way and in a lowlier spirit to try and bring to your attention what we are attempting to do, and the difficulties we meet."

"We have to face the indifference of men, for there is a lack of appreciation in the deepest and truest sense of the value of the college stands. Education has become popular and easily attained, and we fail to appreciate it sometimes because it costs so little. This indifference must be met and overcome."

Secularism.

"Then there is secularism and materialism that makes it impossible for us to realize the best things. There are people who value higher education only in so far as it is a man for a higher salary. I do not like that idea. We are not here to make a living, but a life, and does a man think much of education who loves it simply for the salary it fits him for?"

"I am not amazed that people should be exercised over the teaching of the colleges, for it is the spiritual side of life we need to guard most closely. The great stringency of this land is not in the financial realm but in the intellectual and spiritual, and it isn't the lack of money that makes men unhappy, but the lack of soul. It is the soul within the man that makes him capable of real, joyful and noble living."

"Then, in the theological faculty, we find a religious prejudice against higher education; a pre-judging of these things with a tendency towards discounting them. It is not this a relic of the obscurantism that centuries ago consigned Erasmus to hell and others to the stake, because they thought as other men did not think? This questioning, sometimes even doubting spirit, has been the guiding spirit of some of the best men the world has known. And no fear has arisen that the intellectual life might thrust

W. J. WRAY, Proprietor.

They started five years ago in the wholesale business on King street, and had no intention of doing any retail business, but when purchasers of jewelry were unable to obtain what they wanted elsewhere in the city, they felt sure they could get same from very unsatisfactory sources, and as they were not in a position to handle the retail trade, since moving onto Richmond street they now have plenty of display cases, and being a wholesale business, they are obliged to carry a heavy stock of all lines of watches, clocks, jewelry, silverware and cut glass. If you are looking for anything in this line you will find the largest assortment shown in London, and at prices that are seldom duplicated for the quality. They carry all grades from the cheapest to the most expensive, and they are sure to please any purchaser looking for anything in their line.

They also make a specialty of making over and repairing old jewelry, and have skilled workmen in their watch department. Mr. Wray has always made it one of his strong features to have every customer satisfied. Having some articles of their stock at very low prices, and they will be replaced, and should a customer purchase anything from their store that is not satisfactory, Mr. Wray will thank them to let him make same right, and it will be replaced. He is only too willing to make same right, and it will be replaced. He is only too willing to make same right, and it will be replaced.

On Saturday of this week they will give to every purchaser of goods to the amount of $1.00 over a Rogers' plated fruit knife, valued at 75 cents, as a souvenir of their opening day. Give them a call when you are in need of anything in their line, and they are sure to please you. Always look for this sign:

C. P. R. Detroit Excursion.

SUMMER RATES BY SOUTHWESTERN TRACTION.

Summer rates on the Traction Company will be put into effect on Saturday, June 5. Many of the rates this year show a decided reduction over last summer's rates, among which is a 50-cent rate trip between London and St. Thomas on Wednesdays, as well as Saturdays, and 50-cent adult return trip from London to Port Stanley every day, and children 30 cents. The limited cars will be placed in service on Monday, June 14—one leaving Port Stanley at 6:30 on Mondays only; one at 7:45 daily, and one leaving London at 4:45 daily will make the trip between Port Stanley and London in one hour and twelve minutes, making but one stop in St. Thomas.
