this unnecessary flight redounds wholly to his credit."

"Unnecessary—flight!" gasped Dorls.

"Yes, ma'am. That is why I hurried here. A certain person of the femining gender found me at O'Hara's, and told me such a spiteful yarn of events that I thought it best to come here in your victoria, and thus make sure of not missing you. Claude Waverton will be a very surprised man when he arrives at the bureau, because my friend Steingall will show him a cablegram from the chief of police in Mexico City which announces that the half-caste who really committed the murder for which Mr. Waverton was convicted confessed his crime four years ago. The authorities did not publish the fact widely, and their excuse is that it could do no good, since the Claude Waverton concerned was reported to have been drowned some years earlier in an English vessel that was lost with all hands off the coast of Paraguay, Now, you must bear up, ma'am, though good news is often as trying as bad news."

But Doris felt that she wanted to cry her heart out, and the tears welled forth, strive against them as she might.

So after all, Mrs. Waverton did not go to New York, and besiege departmental offices; but she sent a telegram written and rewritten a dozen times before it was dispatched, and received another shortly before midnight next day, the postoffice dispatched, and received another shortly before midnight next day, the postoffice being kept open till its arrival.

Then she hastened to Narragansett Pier, and nearly a month elapsed before Waverton wrote from Sixty-fourth street to announce that by payment of much money, by the use of powerful influence, and above all because of the assistance of Clancy and Steingall, he had been allowed to escape prosecution for the many and varied offences he had committed when he assumed a dead man's personality and estates.

because she will realize that she has been bluffed into an unnecessary marriage."

"Well that is the end of the Waverton case," said Steingall, and he blew rings of smoke as he looked up at the celling. But Clancy sighed. To him, the mannunter, the chase was everything, and the capture of small account. And the Waverton case had certainly provided a thrilling chase.

At last came the day when the two at last came the day when the two sisters and little Kathleen drove to the railroad station at Narragansett Pier, and met the incoming New York express. Mrs. Daunt eyed the new Claude Waverton with a covert curlosity that soon merged with a covert curlosity that soon merged into active approval.

"I suppose, Doris," she said late that evening, when kissing her sister goodnight, "I suppose—"

Doris flushed a vivid red under Phyllis's close scrutiny. "You need not suppose anything," she murmured. "The wedding is arranged for next month."

"Good gracious!" came the surprised cry. "You have not been long in settling matters. Why, you and he have not been alone together more than a minute since he arrived. How did you manage to reach the point of fixing the date so speedily?"

"Oh, that was quite easy. Claude told me that Rice had heard, somehow or other that Tearle had married Mrs. Dela-

"What has that got to do with it?"
"Well, he said that it was the only sort

Clancy.

"No. I know. You may try your hand at guessing, if you like; then I shall tell you whether or not you are right."

"Well, then, my notion is this: Mrs. Delamar bought the various ingredients for her husband in the hope and belief that he meant to kill himself. She realized that the meant to kill himself. She realized that he meant to kill himself. that he meant to kill himself. She realized that there was a good deal of risk in returning to the cottage by night, but she dared everything in order to make sure that the man was dead. I have an idea, too, that Tearle followed her, or was spying on her, and that he knew so much that she dare not refuse to marry blue when their materials for a 4-year size.

"His wife is such a splendid manager!"

T TOW often have you heard this said of some one of your lady friends?—one who seems to run her household more easily and smoothly than the average. She has the happy knack of buying well - of making a dollar do a full dollar's work. Yet - after all-it doesn't need a genius to become a skilful home imanager. The clever housewife is the woman who never buys haphazard. She selects her food supplies. She doesn't merely ask for "some" ham or "some" bacon, for instance. She goes to the trouble of finding out one definite brand of goods of known reputation—and she sticks to that brand. The Swift Canadian Co., Limited, has solved the food-buying problem for practically millions of housewives all over the world.

Swift's FOOD PRODUCTS

The following are some of the choice Swift specialties. Always look for these brands, and insist on having them:

"Swift's Premium" Ham. "Swift's Premium" Bacon. "Swift's Cotosuet." "Brookfield" Sausage. "Brookfield" Eggs.

The housewife who will make a point of asking for "Swift's" is well rewarded. She is assured of uniform tip-top quality always. The name "Swift" is a guarantee of choice, perfectly prepared, carefully selected food products which never disappoint.
