I suppose professors and doctors can see these germs in the air which are invisible to ordinary mortal eyes. BALTIMORE.)

ANSWER—You nearly understand, I do not insist that the germs responsible for blood poisoning after a wound by a nail, bright or lusty, are necessarily present in the dirt or on the skin about the wounded surface, and the nail may simply push them into the wound. The germs are just as visible to ordinary eyes as to the eyes of professors or doctors—through a microscope. There are none so blind in this matter as those who never have had the opportunity of looking through a microscope at disease germs.

peritonitis. My physician claims I have adhesions which cause constant pain in my left side. Will you please explain adhesions and tell me whether there is any cure besides another operation? (MISS M. A. M.)

ANSWER—Infection, causing inflammation, in the chest cavity, in the abdominal cavity, in the pelvic cavity, may cause a sticking together of the opposing surfaces of organs or structures which are normally freely moveable, by bands or cords of fibrous tissue which forms from the exudate or matter extruded by the inflamed surfaces. If you have peritonitis every year there must be a source of infection which should be eradicated. As a rule adhesions cause no trouble, and it is more likely that such pain as you describe is due to inflammation than to adhesions. Adhesions are not nearly so bad as they are painted.

The tent itself is very eleverly made, naving a double roof with an air space between which makes it cooler, while the side walls may be let down from the top to admit air. Screen doors have been made and are ready to be put on, which will greatly aid in keeping out flee and other insects.

The furniture of the tent is of a rustic character, well in keeping with the
