

The labors of the first missionaries have been carried on by others equally earnest and there is now a Reformed Nestorian Church, with over eighty congregations and Sabbath Schools, fifty native pastors; a College and Training School for boys, the Girls' Industrial School, all in Oroomiah, and about a hundred day schools in the villages. Most of the Nestorians are very poor, for a man can only earn ten or twelve cents a day and a woman half as much, yet the members contribute, on an average, a dollar a year to the support of the gospel. You would think it strange to see, as a lady did not long ago, a Sabbath School in which, in cold winter weather, barefooted and poorly clad children were sitting in circles on the cold earth floor with their teachers in the centre, and when collection time came, many of them putting in an egg instead of a coin; yet even these poor children had learned to know the joy of giving of their own to Jesus and were that day planning how they could deny themselves to do it. Should not such an example stir us up to love and good works?
