

Epworth League Reading Course

FOR 1897-98

1. The Social Law of Service. By Prof. Richard T. Eby.

For young people who should be introduced to the study of our social problems, we do not know of a safer, truer or more illuminating book.—The Kingdom.

2. With the Poets. By Dean Farrar.

The fact that the book has been edited by Dean Farrar is a guarantee that the selections have been made with great discrimination and good taste. Nothing more suitable for a Reading Course than this volume of poetry could be imagined. It will furnish many choice pieces for recitation in the Reading Circle and the League.

3. Architects of Fate. By Dr. O. S. Marden.

You have put another engine on the train to steam away to the heights with carloads of our young folk. It is enough to stir the blood of age, these bugle-notes from those who have set the echoes flying of "Excelsior." I need not say, "May you be blessed in your deed," for "you are twice blessed" already.—Frances E. Willard.

4. Our Lord's Teaching. By Rev. James Robertson, D.D.

The fourth book of the Course is intended to cover the field of Bible Study and devotional reading. The volume selected, "Our Lord's Teaching," is one of the famous Scotch Guild Series, and it has reached its 15th thousand in circulation. No subject could be found of greater interest or importance, and the clear and able way in which it is handled by the author will make the book exceedingly helpful to all who desire to understand the words of the Great Teacher. "Our Lord's Teaching" will repay the most careful study, and will supply any amount of interesting material for discussion in the "Reading Circle."
