BY THE AUTHOR OF THE MISIONARY'S SON. CHAPTER VIL COLLEGE.

TOWARD the close of a lovely day in the beginning of September a lad entered the village of W. He carried a bundle from the end of a "Yes," said Andy. stick slung over his shoulder, and his dusty feet "How do you mean the Lord Jesus sent showed that he had been walking for a consider-70u ?" asked Fred after a pause. "He gave me the wish to come," said Andy; able distance.

W. was a beautiful place. On either side of a neat street pretty little cottages are situated, and peer out invitingly from amid clustering trees and shrubbury. Half way up the village a road turns off toward the college. The buildings of this institution are situated upon a fine slope f.cing the sea. Orchards and groves adorn the beautiful grounds, while among them are pleasant winding paths.

Up this road our traveler turned, and after walking a little distance i.e sat down-upon a rustic seat by the roadside. The gentle seabreeze fauned his heated brow, and was cagerly inhaled by him as he sat there to rest. He could see the collection of college buildings : he could glance down upon the village and see the people passing up and down the road ; he could look out toward the water and view the ships sailing over the sea.

While he looked he heard a confused noise of voices. Some boys were approaching him, They were coming down the road from the college toward the village. At first they were concealed by the trees, but at length they came to view. There were six or seven of them, and they walked slong langhing, shouting, and singing. Seeing the strange lad seated upon the bench in their grounds, they came up to him. The lad took off his hat and bowed respect-

"I will if they're all like you," said Andy. fully. His fresh, honest face, and his courtesy "Do you like me !" asked Fred, very much conciliated the lads. leased " Are you in want of anything ?" said one. a ho was entirely won by the kindness of his new "Yes," said the lad ; " I'm lookin' for Docther c juaintance.

"O well, you're all right ; he lives up there in the first house you come to.' " Isn't be a professor ?"

"Yes, that's your man. But," said the same ellow after a long walk ?' " Yes, sir."

THE CHRISTIAN "Yes, it is strange," said Andy; " and me Providence has guided you thus far, and that there are great things in store for you. whole life has been strange." "here are great things in store for you. Hold Fred was stlent for a little while, and again on to that full of yours. You can come to me to-morrow morning a eight o'clock, and I'll see what classes you ar suited for. Mr. Bartlett, the principal of the " O you won't have begin at the very first academy, will be here to examine you. I am then. Why, how did you learn? I never saw glad that you have got on so far."

" Do you think he can come into our class "I began to learn in Ireland and afterwards a sir ?" asked Fred eag rly. "I don't know. We will see. Perharps so." "O good ! good !' shouted Fred, half forget. I knows a little geography, but I dosen't know ful of the doctor's presence. "And now Andy, tell me about Mr. Trueman grammar," said Andy. "I've got a mighty lot

How did he bear his loss ?" " Beautifully, sir; like a Christian. He don' "O indeed. I think you know a great deal for an Irish boy," said Fred; "and if you know seem to mind it more than a feather." " And still he lost everything !"

" May I ask how far you've come?"

" Thirty-five miles to-day."

"Thirty-five! Pretty good, too, No wonder you look tired."

"I came all the way from F.," said the lad. "F.! why, that's nearly two hundred miles away !" cried the other.

V. a "

Well, you ought to be fired. I advise you to hurry up to Dr. Doran's and get rested. Come, boys, don't let's detain the poor fellow. Get a good supper and get rested ;" and after bidding him a kind adieu they moved off.

One, however, lingered behind. He was a lad of about twelve years of age, who had silently looked at the tired boy while the others were speaking. He had a light, clear complexion, a small round face, a bright blue eye, and curly, flaxen-colored hair. "Aint you very tired? Can't I carty that bundle for you?" he said to the lad in a kind tone.

"O no, no; I can carry it; it isn't me that gets tired so aisy."

At this the lad rose and prepared to go on. " And you've come ell the way from F. P said " Are you going to stay here ?" the boy. "Yes"

" In the village, or on the hill ?"

'Here, at the school."

"How ! at the school !"

"I'm goin' to study; I'm goin' to be a scholar." What ! you a scholar

'Yes. I'm a poor Irish boy, but I'm goin' to stay here till I get an eddication." The boy looked at him earnestly, and measured him with his eye from head to foot. ' At last he said

"Did anybody send you here ?" " Yes.

" Who ?"

"The Lord Jesus."

Again the boy looked earnestly at him, and seemed scascely able to understand him. "Well," he said at length, "if you're going to stay here I'm gald. I like you. I think we'll be good filends. Tell me your name; mine is Fred Vincent."

And mine is Ardy O'Hara." said our friend, deeply moved by the kindness of the boy, and, touched by his sweet voice and gentle manner. "Andy O'Hara? you're an Irish boy, sint you ? You'll he the only Irish boy in all the academy. So you're going to stay and be a scholar here ? how strange!"

Dear, Gear !" said he : " what a misfortune!" fling.

"Well, Andy, Mr. Trueman gives you a good character. So you have really determined to be-gin and try to get an education?"

"You know it will not be an easy thing for
