The receivership plan is, however, looked I find it quite a pleasant trick upon by the department as workable, sound in law, and the only sensible scheme so far proposed by which the desired end may be reached. What the courts may think of it remains to be seen. The court is asked first of all to grant an injunction restraining the defendant corporation from engagand as an alternative, that a receiver be appointed to carry on the business. This plan is adopted because the government realizes how difficult it is for any department or court to force a corporation to continue in business in conformity with the law.
