All consented except J. H. Soper, who used opprobrious epithets and assaulted Masters. At this point N. H. Soper, a brother of the saloon-keeper, interfered and a friend of Masters interposed, when a melee ensued, in which W. H. Soper, a son of the preprietor of the saloon, shot Masters in the back, the ball going through the right lung and killing him almost instantly. This occurred in the forenoon. About noon another tragedy occurred only twelve miles south of Nicholasville, among the cliffs on the bank of the Kentucky river, in which Granville. Smith, aged 60 years, killed his nephew, William Hughes, theu shot himself. Both men were farmers living near Danville. Hughes tailed lately, involving Smith in the loss of $20,000—nearly all the money he had. Smith had been disturbed in mind and threatened Hughes' slife. About non Smith secreted himself among the cliffs on the road ascending on the south bank of the Kentucky river. Hughes passed about an hear later in a carriage with his wife. Smith shot Hughes twice with a revolver, one ball passing through the bowels, the other through the lungs. Mrs. Hughes supported her husband and secured the reins of the horses, which ran away. Smith fired a shot at Mrs. Hughes was not dead, though beyond recovery. Smith went to the woods and shot himself between the eyes, in the presence of a negro boy.
