- "He has not given us any systematic exposition of the Platonic philosophy; he has not devoted even a single chapter to the general estimate of Plato's doctrines and a statement of their place in the history of thought. He has been content to follow the Protean philosopher through the mazes of each dialogue, sometimes translating long passages word for word, more often giving a sort of running analysis of the substance, and in both cases interspersing from time to time his own comments and criticisms. . . . Every one who opens his book can see that it is the work of a powerful mind which, however set back by itself a high ideal of perfection, has thought no pains too great to be expended in carrying out his scheme."—Sat. Rev. xx, 84.
- "The 'Plato' brings out aspects of Greek thought in the fifth and fourth centuries B.C. which philosophical historians have generally thrust into the background, and is thus not likely to lose its importance."—Dict. of Nat. Biog., xliii, 299.

- "The contents are miscellaneous: French and English agriculture; art, ancient and modern; local history; the law of marriage, (in verse); Thomas Moore and Sydney Smith; and (what strikes us to be the gem of the collection) the 'Case of the Poor against the Rich, fairly stated.'"—Sat. Rev., xiv, 60.
4. The Personal Life of George Grote: compiled from Family Documents, Private Memoranda, and Original Letters to and from Various Friends, Lon., 1873, 8vo; 2d ed. same year.
- "It is exceedingly readable,—more than readable, entertaining. . . . The contrast between Mr. Grote's quiet, simple, and scholarly letters, full of the work he was upon or the public events of the day, and Mrs. Grote's somewhat strong-minded personal sallies and baggage, has something of the effect of horse-dish sauce with must beef. We should like the book better with much less loudness of tone; but perhaps we might not read it with so much curiosity and amusement."—Spectator, xlv, 638.
- "Mrs. Grote's work is almost an autobiography of her husband, and probably he could not himself have composed it with equal fidelity and force."—Sat. Rev., xxxv, 783.
