

Qn. and F. read, "And I could sow," which Pope altered to weep, an emendation fully justified by line 23. We have followed the Variorum, Dyce, and Singer in adopting it.

245 Line 32; Give some supportance. Used by Shakespeare only in this passage, and in Twelfth Night (iii. 1 (20); "for the supportance of his vow."

246 Line 46; Her knots disorder'd. Compare Love's Labour's Lost (i. 1, 219); "thy cacious-knotted garden." See note 10 of that play in our edition.

247 Line 57; We at time of year. It is omitted in Qn. and F., it was first supplied by Capell. Both sense and metre absolutely require it.

248 Line 72; O, I am press'd to death! This alludes to the old punishment of pain forte et dure, inflicted on those who declined to plead to the indictment against them; it consisted in piling weights on the wretched victim's chest. Compare Much Ado (ii. 1, 76); "press me to death with wit."

249. Lines 73, 74:

Thou,

(she pauses, as if half-choked by her emotion)

Old Adam's likeness, set to dress this garden,

How darest

Thy harsh rude tonguee gound this unpleasing news?

Printed as two lines only in Qn. and F.;

Then, old Adam-like, as set to dress this garden

How darest thy harsh rude tonguee and this unpleasing news?

F. 2, Q. 5, F. 3, F. omit rude in second line. Pope omits old in first line, and harsh, rude in second line; but this is rather an arbitrary proceeding. It is evident that the lines as arranged in the old copies are anything but rhythmical. We have arranged them as above, believing that the detached syllables Thou, and How darest, express the violent agitation of the queen's feelings, and were not intended to form part of either line.

250 Line 105; I'll set a bank of Rue, sour herb of grace. This plant (Ruta graveolens) was once much cultivated in English gardens for its medicinal qualities. Rue is, of course, an English form of the Latin name; but as to rue means "to be sorry," and so "to repeat," and as penitance is the chief sign of grace, it came to be called "Herb of Grace." London, writing in 1808, said "it is to this day called Rue Grace in Sussex." Its specific Latin name graveolens is derived from its strong aromatic smell; it has a very bitter taste, and was used extensively in old prescriptions. To its supposed quality as an eye-salve Milton alludes in Paradise Lost:

then purg'd with euphrasie and rue
The visual nerve, for he had much to see.

—Book xi. lines 414, 415.

Dr. Bambury says of it, "it is a powerful stimulant and narcotic, but not much used in modern practice" (see Ellacombe's Plant Lore of Shakespeare, p. 265). Rue is frequently mentioned in Shakespeare. Compare Hamlet iv. 5 (1-3, 182); "there's rue for you; and here's some for me; we may call it herb-gene of Sundays."

251 Line 1.—Westminster Hall had been rebuilt by Richard; the work was commenced in 1397, and completed in 1400. The first Parliament held in the new building, was summoned for the purpose of deposing Richard. Shakespeare has, in this scene, mixed up the proceedings of two Parliaments, that which met on September 30th, 1399, the writs for which were issued in King Richard's name; and that which met on October 6th, having been summoned by Henry immediately on his assuming the crown. It was in the latter Parliament, on October 19th, that the accusations against the Duke of Aumale (Albemarle) were made.

252 Line 10; In that dead time. It is doubtful whether dead here means "dark and dreary" as the Clarendon Press Edd. explain it, or "deadly" as Schmidt explains it. In Hamlet (i. 4, 65) we have "Jump at this dead hour," i.e. midnight, the hour when nearly all life is apparently dead (in sleep). In Midsummer Night's Dream (ii. 2, 57):

So should a murderer look, so dead, so grim.

The word, cert. only, seems to mean "deadly" unless it means, as we say now, "so deadly pale."

253 Line 12; the RESTFUL English court, probably means "quiet," "peaceful." Compare Sonn. LXV. 1:

Tid'd with all these, for restful death I cry,

Some explain it as—"stationary," while the Clarendon Press Edd. give the sense as "quiet, reposing; because it had no need to act, but only to give orders." The simplest meaning, i.e. "peaceful," is most likely to be the right one here; as England was, at the time alluded to, at peace with all foreign powers.

254 Line 21; Shall I sa much dishonour my faire stars? This, undoubtedly, means "Shall I dishonour my birth?" and refers to the common belief that the stars influenced the circumstances of one's birth. In Holland's Translation of Pliny's Natural History (bk. ii. chap. viii.) we find: "The Stares which we said were fixed in the heaven, are not (as the common sort thinketh) assigned to every one of us; and appointed to men respectively: namely, the bright and faire for the rich; the lesse for the poore; the dimme for the weak, the aged and feble; neither shine they out more or lesse, according to the lot and fortune of every one, nor arise they each one together with that person unto whom they are appropriate; and die likewise with the same; ne yet as they set and fall, do they signifie that any hodie is dead." Compare All's Well (i. 1, 196, 197):

we the power both
Whose baser stars do shut us up in wyls.

255 Line 20; To STAIN the TEMPER of my knightly sword. —Compare I. Henry IV. (v. 2, 94):

A sword, whose temper I intend to stain
With the hot blood that I can meet with.

The Clarendon Press Edd. say: "The harder the steel the brighter polish would it take, hence the polish may be taken as a measure of the temper."

256 Line 38; If thou DENIST it twenty times, than liest —Printed deafest in F. 1. The elision of the e is not attended to so carefully, in the first Folio, with regard to
