A celebrated painter of Madrid, who A celebrated painter of Madrid, whose real name it will be more discreet not to disclose, but whom I shall call Morales, had just completed a superb picture for the convent of the Escurial. He had received a large sum of money for his work, and by way of a little relaxation after the long continued toil bestowed upon it he had assembled around a well spread table a few choice spirits from among his fellow artists. It was a bachelor entertainment. Not a lady was to sit down with them. Even the mistress of the house herself. Dona Casilda, had been excluded. Morales bad sent her off with her maid to pass the day with one or her cousins. But Dona Casilda, having a little curiosity in her composition, was very anxious to know what was to take place in her absence, and had a strong desire to find out what so many men could have to talk about when there were no women present. Instead, therefore, of remaining at the house of her cousin she quickly returned, bringing the latter with her, and the two were presently ensenced in a little closet adjoining the studio, where, with eye and ear closely applied to the keyhole, they remained who had gone in search of Mother Castinopius. ly returned, bringing the latter with her, and the two were presently en-sconced in a little closet adjoining the studio, where, with eye and ear closely applied to the keyhole, they remained eagerly listening to all that passed.
