THE BALANCE

Uncle Sam To-day the Best Neutral Power To Help Allies in a Fight to a Finish "Silver Bullets" Will Count.

Of all the foolish questions which many people have been prone to ask since the danger of a break between the United States and Germany arose, the most absurd is the query: What could we do if we were to espouse the side of the allies? It is urged that as we have only a handful of an army and the allies, except for submarines, already have a plethora of sea-power, we could be hardly more formidable to Germany, under present conditions than little Montenegro.

But the people who take this superficial view of the forces now contending for supremacy in Europe not men, but money and supplies, as now realized by the statesmen Europe, that must settle this Germany and Austria when the broke out, a year ago, were more thoroughly prepared for war than any nations ever were in the history of the world; and, with their remarkable ability for organization and economy of operation, have for twelve months withstood the gigantic coalition battling against them.

Since the fish rush on Paris failed. however, and the opposing armies "dug themselves in" in almost impregnable trench fortifications, it has been realized that the winner must wear down the opposition by sheer attrition of economic resources. Germany, Austria and Turkey, owing to the preponderance of British nava power, must rely mainly upon their own resources, although it is a known fact that they have been large importers of food products and basic materials for munitions of wa through neutral countries. The Quadruple Alliance, on the other hand, have been drawing upon th resources of the rest of the world and especially upon the United States which is the best equipped neutral country to furnish money and muni-

But which our present relations with Germany are maintained, Bri tain, France, Russia and Italy must pay us for their purchases; and, while their credit has been good, the suc cesses of the Germans and the tr mendous scale upon which the pur chases are being made tend to lessen the extent of credit which we can allow them. Already our manufacturers are demanding larger pro portions of the payments in cash and better security for the credit extended. As a matter of fact, the shipment of supplies from here to Russia, especially, has been delayed because our merchants cannot accept the the terms of payment offered; and owing to the heavy discount at which Newfoundland, and to-day there, the British pound sterling has fallen. are many thousands perfectly British financiers are now here to arrange for a huge loan.

Now what could we do if we espoused the side of the allies? Immediately this problem of credit would be solved. They would not have to pay We repair brokne plates and for munitions. We would give them billions of value in money and munifrom foreign lands and looked upon ever at a charge that will surprise | tions, enough to equip every Cossack, race who could be scoured up from the remotest confines of the Russian and British empires. On the other hand, Germany, under existing relations, might yet desire to place a big loan here. There are banking houses in this country with German affiliations, hardly second to Morgan in power, who would be able and glad to float a big German loan here, but this would be impossible if a diplomatic break occurs. In a finish fight, which this surely is, and one which admittedly must finally be settled by "silver bullets," the United States, with its limitless resources, hold the balance of power. It does not seem possible that Germany would, under any provocation, allowed this balance to be tipped on the side of the allies. That is why she is now so changing the tone of her negotiations with the United States. She realizes the truth, if some of our own people do not.
