AUSTRALIA GETS BACK.

The tariff discrimination that has been declared against us by the Commonwealth of Australia is much to be regretted, says the Mail and Empire. Australia is a splendid market, and our business with that portion of the Empire has been growing in recent years. We have sent goods there to a value as high as $2,000,000 in a twelve-month, and the outlook for even better things has been excellent. Now the Commonwealth, in its new tariff, places us on a high schedule, and our business is in danger of being largely reduced, if not altogether wiped out.

Not so long since a blunder by the finance Minister and the Minister of Agriculture resulted in our exclusion by tariff from the market of Japan. That mistake has been remedied through the intervention of the Home Government. But another error which has brought a heavy discrimination against us in Germany is still baring fruit. We cannot export any of our products to the heavy levies that are made upon them. At the same time the United States has favored treatment there, and is doing a rushing business. The farmers and the fruit-growers of the Republic have practically the monopoly of the German market. In the case of Germany, and in that of Australia, the situation so injurious to our trade has been produced by the Act of our Government. When the preferential tariff for Great Britain was under consideration the proper course to pursue was the negotiation of a treaty with Germany in advance of action by us.

That is to say, it would have been wise to have prepared for the new movement by arrangements with the other countries, Germany among them, with which we had treaty obligations that were to be affected by the change. Instead of entering into negotiations with Germany, our Government simply broke the existing treaty, and left it to the Imperial Government to patch up the difficulty. Germany responded by placing us on a higher tariff basis. Then the Ottawa politicians retaliated, whereupon the German Empire replied again, and ruled our products out altogether. The situation, in so far as Germany is concerned, is the result of bad management at this end of the dispute. The Ottawa Government should have negotiated a new treaty before entering into the preferential policy; or, having failed in that regard, it ought to have dealt with the question diplomatically, offering arguments to show, first, that we are justified in favoring our own Empire, and, secondly, that we make no discrimination against countries that are not of the British Empire. If a wise course had been followed the question with Germany would have been speedily settled.

In the Australian case our Government has been inviting discrimination by its treatment of the Commonwealth. While a tariff favor has been given to many British possessions, Australia has been excluded, although that part of the Empire is a very good customer of ours. The exclusion has rankled, and now we have the result. In their tariff-making the Australians give us a taste of retaliation. The folly of the Ottawa politicians is gradually closing markets against us. It is not the principle of British tariff preference that brings about this deplorable situation, but the unwise and undiplomatic way in which it is carried out.

HER PROBLEM.

So you are going to marry a young man who earns only $25 per week? Yes, admitted the pampered society beauty. I love him.
And live in a four-room flat? It is true.
Do you not at times feel apprehensions? Yes; I must confess I do. I sometimes feel worried as to where we are going to put our butler and my three maids.

Say what you mean even if the other fellow insists on misunderstanding it.

FASHION HINTS

GIRLS' COSTUME.

No. 4192.

An attractive costume, consisting of a semi-fitted jacket and a skirt and a skirt and a skirt, is pictured here, the coat being made of white serge and the dress in white lawn, with pale blue dots. The jacket is cut with three front and three back sections and closes at the front with buttons and cord loops, and the coat sleeves are also cut in three sections, machine stitching giving a tailored finish. A collar of velvet or contrasting material in tab effect affords neck completion. The straight, gathered skirt is completed with a belt of the required size, and buttons and buttonholes fasten the brette. Serge, sicilain, linen, pique, duck and flannel are recommended for making.

The quantity of material required for the medium size is 3-8 yard of contrasting material for collar, 25-8 yards of insertion for skirt and 5-1-2 yards of 27-inch material for costume. Pattern No. 4192 is cut in sizes 6 to 14 years.
Mailed postpaid on receipt of 10 cents, name, size, and address to the Fashion Department of the C. Austin Co.

The Fields of Peace.

It was the belief of the ancient Egyptians, according to a recent writer, that everything, material and immaterial, had its immortal double. Out of this grew the idea of a life in the future state of perfect happiness in the "fields of peace." For a long time the common people regarded these "fields of peace" not as a celestial place, but as situated in the fertile and well watered regions of the Nile delta in the northwest of Egypt, where the blessed ever breathed the cool form of their life upon earth. They plowed their fields and grew the grain which supplied them with the "bread which grew not stale and beer that never became sour." Here was situated the duplicate of their earthly towns or villages.

Portuguese Bullfights.

At Portuguese bullfights not only are the points of the bulls' horns sawed off, but the stumps that remain are carefully padded. The horses also are ridden with consummate skill, and every precaution is taken to prevent the bull touching them. Banderillas are used by the men on foot and on horseback and are planted in the neck of the bull, which irritates the bull, but cannot be described as torture. Just as much skill is shown as in a Spanish bullfight, and there may be just as beautiful a display of costumes, but there is no killing either of the bull or of the horses.

A LAW OF THE DESERT.

With Water and Food Scarce, Extreme Measures Are Warranted.
It was in the camp of Bullfrog that Mitchell, the big brick red mining man of Nevada, told me his view of law on the desert.

"If you are prospecting with an unreasonable hog of a partner who wants to eat three slices of bacon and half a loaf of bread for breakfast and lets the canteen gurgie down his throat while you get along with a strip of bacon and just moisten your lips when you take a drink, then you're all right if you kill him. I'd kill him if there wasn't anything else to do. It's a tough game, and it's your life or his when you're lost or your grub stake and water are giving out."

These observations are suggested by the arrival in camp two days before of the bones of a prospector who had died of thirst some forty miles from Bullfrog during the previous summer. He had been a carpenter, earning wages of $8 a day in the new camps during the "boom," but the gold fever led him away from this safe and profitable toil. He picked up a partner, they loaded their burros and trailed off south toward the Death valley country to prospect in the Funeral range.

Three weeks after the desert swallowed them up the partner wandered into a freighters' camp, half crazed with thirst and exhaustion. He was able to tell the freighters that the carpenter was somewhere out beyond, lost and without water, too helpless to move. The partner was too weak and fevered to go back with the rescue party of freighters, so they left him in camp. He directed them as well as he could, but the search was bootless, and Griffin, the carpenter of Bullfrog, was added to the long list of desert victims. Several months later a party of prospectors tumbled by chance across what was left of him. There were no traces of his outfit. He had thrown away his gun, his canteen and his hat. One shoe was found thirty feet from his body, and he had torn off and flung away most of his clothing. These were the ghastly evidences of the last great fight he had made to struggle on.

"When they're dying for water," said Mitchell, who knows the "desert game," "they throw away everything until all their clothes are gone, and you generally find them without a stitch on."—Ralph D. Paine in Outing.

Always in Season.

When Hiram Bassett went down on Cape Cod to pay a visit his friends provided him with every sort of fish they could muster, and for five days he was treated to mackerel, halibut, oysters, clams, scallops and many other varieties in the best possible condition.

"Well, Hiram," said his host on the day of Mr. Bassett's return to his home, "I'd like to see what you'll get Hannah to cook for you first thing when you reach home. I reckon you've had fish enough to last you for one while."

"Pooh!" said Mr. Bassett. "I guess you don't know anything about it. You haven't lived in Massachusetts long enough. Hannah'll get me the same thing she always does when I've been away from home for a spell—a real good mess o' codfish 'n' potato hash. That's what Hannah'll get me."

Zigzag New Yorkers.

"Nobody in New York walks straight," said the fault finder. "Watch a score of pedestrians on the sidewalk, and not one of them sticks to a straight path. Those deviations are not always due to the crowded condition of the pavement either. During the rush hours a man is supposed to dodge this way and that in his efforts to make progress, but when given a clear road there is no excuse for so much sidetracking. Yet, no matter how favorable the conditions, the New Yorker zigzags just the same. He might have a stretch of sidewalk a block long all to himself and be perfectly sober, yet in that distance he would veer from curb to stoop line and back again several times."—New York Post.

An Odd Tag of War.

Screw propellers, like most other inventions, had great difficulty in getting recognition from authority. For instance, Sir William Symonds, surveyor and principal designer to the British admiralty, could not be brought to believe in them. He declared that steamships of any sort were "monstrous" and that the screw was impossible. The day came when choices between paddle wheels and screw propellers had to be made. The naval authorities tied two ships stern to stern, and when the screw propelled vessel had triumphed over the paddle steamer in this ludicrous tug of war the lords of the admiralty felt justified in modeling the British navy anew.

Young, but Wise.

A little girl of four was spreading butter on a cracker on the luncheon cloth when her grandfather—at whose table she was—remonstrated with her, telling her that was not the proper place to do it. She never lifted her eyes, but went calmly on with the operation, and when it was finished and she took up the cracker to eat she said quietly to nobody in particular, "Men don't always know what's best."

Its Source.

"How do you suppose the report ever started that you had an execution in your house?" "I don't know, unless it started from the fact that we were hanging some wall paper."—Baltimore American.

Better Than Spanking

Spanking does not cure children of bed-wetting. There is a constitutional cause for this trouble. Mrs. M. Summers, Box 4, Windsor, Ont., will send free to any mother her successful home treatment, with full instructions. Send no money, but write her to-day if you children trouble you in this way. Don't blame the child; the chances are it can't help it. This treatment also cures adults and aged people troubled with urine difficulties by day or night.

A Woman's Revenge.

It is perfectly incomprehensible how man can go on wearing the clothes he does—how he can balance on his head a huge black jam pot with a ledge to it, increase his limbs in long, tight sacks of dingy hue and wear round his neckly throat something resembling a shining metal band. Every new fashion for man that comes out appears to me uglier than the last.—Spenser in M. A. P.

A Sailor on Sea Pictures.

"I'll take a sailor along with me the next time I buy a marine painting," said a millionaire. "I bought two marines last month, and yesterday my old friend Captain Salthorse had a look at them."

"Salthorse said: 'In this first picture we've got a trading schooner in charge of a tug towing away from a rock bound coast through a fearful jumble of sea. The schooner's maintop mast is gone, and all sails are lowered except her staysail, which is kept hoisted, though she is towing head on to the gale. Why that hoisted staysail? All hands, I suppose, are drunk.'"

"In the second picture," continued Captain Salthorse, the principal boat, an eighteen footer, is racing, yet has no flag flying. That's as incorrect as it would be for you to go to a dinner party minus a shirt. The crew of this boat are getting in the spinnaker, and if they lower away, both spinnaker and boom will be in the water, for they have neglected to let the boom go forward. But I know what the trouble is with them. They, too, are drunk."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

His Visit to the Earl.

There is a well known English bishop who writes a very bad hand. This bad hand caused a sad error to happen some years ago. A young clergyman had written to the bishop to inquire about a vacant curacy, and the reply that the young man got informed him that the salary was small and the work difficult. But there was one mitigating circumstance. The incumbent, among his other duties, would visit the earl every morning and spend two hours there. The curate would have rejected the post but for the daily visit to the earl. That attracted him. There would, no doubt, he told himself, be many fashionable dinners to which he would naturally be invited. He would make many friends among the rich and powerful. These friends would be able to help him in his career. The earl, perhaps, had daughters. One of them—who knows?—stranger things had happened. And so the curate accepted the difficult and poorly paid curacy to discover on his first visit to the town that he had misread the bishop's letter and that his daily two hours' visit was not to the earl, but to the jail.
