

Choice Miscellany.

A Legend.

I read a legend of a monk who painted, in an old convent cell in days bygone, Pictures of martyrs and of virgins sainted, And the sweet Christ-face with the crown of thorns.

As He Had Lived.

Day has finally broken, and there is a reddening of the eastern sky. The faint flush deepens—the purple fades to gold—the gold turns to fire—and the top-most rim of the sun rises from the plain and burnishes the crags and peaks of the Powder River Mountains, as if preparing them for temples of worship.

Burmah's Treasures.

He is old and his strength has waned. Death has been long in coming, but it has drawn him at last. The chill of death drives some men back to the world to die with tender hands about them. Others defy the grim monster to the last, and they die alone, unwept, uncare for.

A Summer Girl.

A little picture. They sat on the upturned bottom of a broken boat. The silvered path of glory stretched across the restless waters up nearly to their feet. They had fallen into silence. No moment was it then to speak of base-ball or of scandal. He was overcome with that tender passion which shines in moonlight.
