TO TELL CHARACTER BY THE HUMAN HAND.

A new method of determining the character of the subject from his hands has been discovered by a --upon which most people rely, but which is often deceitful. Auyone who cares to make a few observa-tions can verify the following facts hands has been discovered by a criminal court judge. The fact that the measurement of the middle finger gives the best means of identification has long been recognized and is now in use the world over. These measure-ments offered mere cortain means Find Brains in Finger Tips. Find Brains in Finger Tips. First, select a man who you know has intelligence above the average; a person who is glited with executive ability, and you will find that he has a strong, firm, to Second, take one whom you know has only sufficient intelligence to eat, drink, sleep and do manual labor; examine his hand and you will find it short, clumsy and thek-set. Sometimes ill-shaped or with twisted fingers. Look for peculiari-ties; you will find them. Follow this practical information, it will help you: Teil me by what hidden magic has long been recognized and is now in use the world over. These measure-ments afford more certain means than the best of photographs or de-scription of criminals that the police officer can get. The theory of the judge referred to is that the hands indicate the character and that they are more to be relied upon than the face, for the reason that people from long being accustomed to the idea that others try to read their faces control the muscular movement of the latter so that it deceives even experts. Not so with the hands. Even if he were conscious of it it is doubtful if the most expert criminal could so control his hands as to de-stroy the telltale marks and indi-cations of character that are there displayed to the initiated like the page of an open book. It is claimed that the general character, of the sub-ject are betrayed by the motions, shape and manner of holding the hands. The judge who is respon-sion of hand emotion." He says he has made, a study of it for several years and has formulated rules for interpreting the signs that are ner-er-failing. From the hands of crimthis practical information, it will help you: Tell me by what hidden magic Our impressions first are led Into liking or disliking, oft before a word is said. Scientists have found in dissect-ing finger tips of the blind that they contain brain cells of percep-tion, or gray maturer of which the brain is composed. The wonderful perception and keen sensitiveness of the hands of the blind have long been an interesting study and sci-ence is at last demonstrating the cause of such a fine perception of the touch. A physician assisting in na autopsy on a person blind from birth found that the inner surface of the lindex finger contained a most complex and delicate ramifi-cation of nerve filaments, dainty and minute nerve twigs in immense main stem. Through constant use the finger tips of the blind acquire this unu-sual development. When we ac-knowledge the presence of these fine, subtle nerves of intelligence in the hand we can no longer doubt that in its lines, mounts and con-tour an intelligent force has im-printed an interesting history, and that the hand gives forth its own story. A TABLOID RESTAURANT: Chicago is to Have One to Serve Up Compressed and Condensed Foods.

Chicago is to have a tabloid res-taurant in the near future if the plans of the prospective manager where foodsetifis in compact form will be served to the hungry will be located on State street convenient to the shopping district. A tabloid restaurant, it is needless to ex-plain, is a place where the patron may take a square meal in a lozenge which may be swallowed at a single gup. If he prefers it that way he may have his dinner in a carp-sule. The people who have become thoroughly accustomed to the tab-loid diet like it and make no attempt to the shower find it hard to find something bulky. and in a posture not so repellant. Nearly everyone will recognize the grasping hand. It, however, is not always an evidence of avarice, and will be seen in most beggars. That the hand should be expressive of emotion may seem surprising to most people, but it is easily explained. When you consider that every muscle in the body is moved by an impulse from the brain the reason for the expressiveness of the hand is appar-ent. There are a large number of muscles in the hand, which are used for closing and opening them and moving them sidewise. When the brain is healthy and the mind is calm all the muscles are acted upon equally. When the brain of a child is healthy and the child is asked to hold out his hand he holds out a symmetrical organ. But if the brain is more or less distortions of the hand. Thus one who does very little brain work, very little thinking on profound subjects, will hold out a hand somewhat like the child's, showing a calm mind. But after a hard days work he will prob-ably drop the thumb, whilch would he an indication of fatigue. Those who have studied the way people hold their hands will tellyou that it is a much better index of mental phenomena than is the face
