confinement in which they might be prevented from putting into execution their nefarious designs upon society.

The idea of the anti-importation society may well be laughed at, as every body will continue to purchase at the cheapest and ... The ignorance of its projectors, ... noxious venom against Britain, ... held up to public contempt. Both ... Upper Province, which cost the ... about £300,000 annually, do not ... her manufactures much more ... irth of the amount consumed by ... States, which do not put her to ... e's expense. It has long been ... that the political parties are too much inclined to overrate the importance and value of those Provinces to Great Britain.

The last Echo du Pays is adorned with a wood cut of a monument to be erected to the memory of L. MARCOUX, who was accidentally shot in 1834, at an election at Sorel—It is a piece of contemptible littleness in the Patriots to endeavour to invest every affair of this kind with the highest degree of importance. What morality to place L. MARCOUX in the calendar of their political saints, and to transform the accidental occasion of ... into imaginaninous political martyrs.

An attempt has been made, without success, to start Mr. YARKES for Kingston, in opposition to the Solicitor-General, Mr. HAGERMAN.

The trial of ROBINSON, which has completely absorbed public interest in New York, for so many days, has at last terminated in the acquittal of the accused.

The Journal of Commerce thus describes the close of the trial:—

"The summing up of counsel on both sides continued until past twelve last night. The Court then charged the Jury, who retired for about fifteen minutes, and returned into Court with a verdict of acquittal. The announcement of which was hailed with loud and boisterous cheers by the people, in and outside the ... rial did not terminate until one o'clock ... Tuesday, which obliges us to ... the Judges charge until tomorrow. ... verdict was pronounced, Robinson, ... first time during the trial, exhibited ... emotion, and burst into tears. In a ... afterwards Robinson left the Court ... the arm of Mr. Hoxie."

It affords pleasure to the travelling ... of the community to learn that five miles on the Laprairie side, of the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad are completed, and that if the weather continues favourable, the whole line will be finished about the end of next month. Besides the accommodation this work will afford to those on this side the line 45, it will not be less valued by the travellers from the other side, who usually visit us towards autumn.

Lower Canada.

THE TEST.—We congratulate Sportsmen in this Province in announcing, that His Majesty has been graciously pleased to bestow a "King's Plate of fifty Guineas," to be run for annually over such course, in Lower Canada, as His Excellency the Governor may deem proper to appoint. A petition to that effect from the Sporting gentlemen of the Three Rivers Race Course, and the gentlemen of the Turf Club of Montreal, praying His Majesty to grant to the Province this annual Royal munificence, was by their unremitted to Lord Aylmer, previous to his departure from the country, kindly taken charge of by the Noblesse; and by his influence and support the application has been crowned with success; this form has one of the many favors conferred by our late Governor-in-Chief on our Turf. We understand that his Excellency Lord Aylmer has been pleased to signify to the Hon. M. Bell, that this year's "King's Plate" shall be run for over the Three Rivers Course, at the time that the Stewards and Trustees of that Course may have fixed for the ensuing Races.—Quebec Mercury.

Private letters were this morning received from a well informed quarter, which state that a Brevet was certainly to take place on the King's Birth day, 18th instant. A Naval promotion is also confidently spoken of at the same time.—Ib.

Lord Altamont, with Lord William and Lord John Browne, sons of the Marquis of Sligo, Governor of Jamaica, who have been on a tour in the United States, are now in this city for a few days.—They have taken up their residence at the Albion Hotel.—Ib.

Upper Canada.

We have it from good authority, that an American Joint Stock Banking Company is about to be established at Niagara, with a capital of £250,000 of real stock. So long as capital is introduced amongst us, it matters but little by whom it comes. People will tell us that we have not commercial (persons for the employment of capital; but capital comes, and we warrant it will be employed, and advantageously too,—the same argument has been raised a hundred times about steamboats, but the steamboats came, and some how or other passengers came too. So we say bring the capital, and the means of employing it will not be far to find.

The farmers on the Thames, by untiring industry, have mostly all succeeded in completing their spring seeding in good time, notwithstanding the late date at which they commenced operations for the year.—In traversing the banks of this beautiful river, the heart is gladdened with the cheering prospects of its inhabitants—and it is here that solid and true happiness may be found in a farmer's life. How grateful would it be to inhabitants in a portion of that British emigration which is thronging to other quarters would terminate among them, and participate in the substantial British enjoyments of a country of the most fertile soil and salubrious climate, and possessing at present orchards in full blooms, wheat fields and meadows carpeted in deep green, and the most of those beauties which tend to captivate the beholder, and amaze him of the effects of industry when expressed by a sensible and a happy people.—Sandwich Emigrant.

The majestic oaks of our District are beginning to attract the attention of our neighbours on the lower Lake. Considerable quantities of staves have been prepared for market on the lake shore in the Townships of Howard and Harwich, during the past winter, and extensive preparations are making by a large company in Kingston, for going extensively into the business on the Thames next fall and winter.—If the Welland Canal was not in existence, how could this trade be carried on, we would ask? Probably some of those worthies who talk so loudly of the profuse waste of money on the Welland Canal could answer us the question.—Ib.

The loss of the two lower bridges on the river Thames, at Chatham and Howard, is a serious one, and it will cost some thousands of dollars to replace them. Probably when rebuilt they will become toll bridges. For the present, however, good ferries are established, which are of great service.—Ib.

Thoughts on Soap.

"We perceive Sir Charles Knightley means to vindicate the cause of the unwashed against that of the unlearned, and to cry cheap soap against cheap knowledge."—Globe Newspaper.

Knowledge and soap! well, pair'd, I trow,
And to part such company I'd be loth;
Though a certain thing call'd a "lie," we know,
Is an article much mixed up with both.

But oh that, within invention's scope,
'Twere possible, for peculiar cases,
To find some wondrous, magic soap,
That would clean men's minds, as well as faces!

What a scouring-out we then might make!
What a washing-day in the House of Peers!
Lay Lords would plenty of soap-suds take,
But the Bench must be scoured o'er head and ears.

Men's minds are affected by their coats—
So skin their colour one season can doubt of it;
And a Bishop's mind (strove'er he votes)
Wants soaking to get the black dye out of it.

Some there are that no effort suppose can
Could e'er imp decent order rub;
While Ex—r—, too, that rogue vivacious,
Would slip through one's fingers in the tub.

As for old SARUM, he'd require
His own books, turned to rags again,
(Their wisest sense) to mop the mire
That falls so fast from his bigot pen.

In short, the job were for none too much—
Just fancy the mess of R—n—'s nobile,
Scarce fit with a pair of tongs to touch,
So foul, to the brim, with trash and twaddle!—

Then W—NCH—, Sir, his brother gander,—
Think what a laundress he must get!
Though to wash him one were a miracle grander
Than holy water hath e'er wrought yet.

After all, too, comes the puzzling doubt,
Whether, scour as we might, through thick and thin,
Having wash'd all the noble nonsense out,
We could get any sprinkling of wisdom in;

Whether, after extracting the various kinds
Of spot, blot, snivel, and drivel from thence,
We could stretch up their Lordships' cautious minds
With a little plain stiffening of common sense.

Alas, alas, I verily think,
Were the magical soap-tub e'er so near,
At the sight of some Lords I'd quail and shrink,
And give up the wash-tub in despair!

Irish Wits of Rebellion.

On Friday last, at the rising of the Court of Exchequer, a batch of Sir indictments little differing from the distant county of Tipperary were brought up in custody of an Usher, a number of rebellion, which the following scene ensued:—

The first prisoner to whom the question was put by the Registrar—What have you to say why you should not be committed under this attainder?—Prisoner—My name is Peter Smith, apparently fifty years of age. The answer was, I am not able to pay the demand. The Court—What is it you are not able to pay?—The tithes. The Registrar—John Kane, have you anything to say why you should not be committed?—Prisoner—Yes; I have no lease of my land; besides, the tax put upon me by the minister is very weighty, and then I am hardly able to pay my rent, letting alone paying tithes. Besides, I never troubled the minister at all at all for anything in the wide earthly world.—(laughter.)

Registrar—Rogue Mather, have you anything to say for yourself why you should not be committed?—Prisoner—I think I have imposed that question upon you, I should say. I do not live at all in the parish for which I am sued, and I hold no land whatever in it. I live in the parish of Berkinkano. Registrar—John Carty, what have you to say?—My landlord is the man to pay the tithes; I did not take the land till after the tithe composition, though I have paid tithes, but I have no right to do so. Baron Smith—We are not now asking you as to the payment of tithes, nor are we deciding anything upon the point as to whether you ought or ought not hereafter to pay them. The question is, why did you not obey the summons of this court by appearing? My Lord, all I got, or all any of us got, was one day's notice. We received the notice on a Thursday, to attend here on Friday, the next day's notice. And you know, my Lord, that it is impossible for any body of strangers, to suppose in fact that they have no religion. To know them you must be a Highlander. A friend of mine happened to be in a boat by which a poor simple-hearted man from St. Kilda was advancing for the first time in his life from his native rock to visit the world; and as he advanced towards the Island of Mull, a world in itself to the enthusiasm of the poor St. Kilda man, the boatsmen commenced asking him about St. Kilda; they questioned him regarding all the peculiarities of that wonderful place, and rallied him not a little on his ignorance of all those great and magnificent things which were to be seen in Mull. He parried them off with great coolness and good humour; at length a person in the boat asked him if ever he heard of God in St. Kilda? Immediately he became grave and collected. 'To what land do you belong?' said he, 'describe it to me.' 'I,' said the other, 'come from a place very different from your barren rock; I come from the land of food and feast, the land of wheat and barley, where nature spreads her bounty in abundance and luxuriance before us.' 'Is that,' said the St. Kilda man, 'the kind of land you come from?' 'Ah, then! you may be got God;' but in St. Kilda man never can. Situated on his rock, suspended over a precipice, tossed on the wild ocean, he never can forget his God—he hangs continually on his arm.' All were silent in the boat, and not a word more was said to him regarding his religion."

A Gentleman, named Charles Bulo, lately residing at Belleville, near Paris, was the possessor of a very considerable fortune. He was a native of Guernsey, in which island his brother is Vice-President of the College of St. Elizabeth. During a journey he made to England six years ago, he married a lady twenty years younger than himself, and who, though not a beauty, is said to be very expert, was endeavouring to withdraw from his rustic tormentors, but was impeded by them, and one threw a stone at him. Dubourdieu could not submit quietly to the assault, but flourishing his staff, soon brought it in contact with the head of the aggressor with such force that he fell never to rise again. He immediately came to Paris and surrendered himself to a commissary of police, expressing his grief. On Tuesday he was taken before an examining magistrate and committed for murder.

REMARKABLE TRAIT OF FERROCITY OF MIND.—A singular incident happened in Boston many years ago, during the administration of Governor Lovercut, of pious memory. A man who had long been insane, one day escaped from his keepers and finding a musket in his way, immediately seized it; and then equipped, sprained in the street, swearing that he would shoot the first person who should dare look him in the face.—He was in a furious passion, foamed at the mouth, and exhibited altogether an image so frightful, that the spectators instantly began to seek a more convenient distance. Governor Lovercut was at that moment passing by; undaunted by this apparition, he stopped, and with singular coolness, thus addressed the madman: "Aha! comrade, as you have become a soldier! That is well. Now let us see if you can go through the manual exercise. Stand to your arms." The man looked at him attentively.—When the Governor continued performing every motion at the same time with his cane. "Present—Fire—Reload." The man obeyed. "Order firelock." All right. "Ground arms." It was done. "Now, right about face, quick step, march." The madman did so, and as soon as he had turned his back, the Governor took up his musket, and ordered the man to be secured.
