A MYSTERIOUS QUEST.

CHAPTER XVII.

The First Step Taken.

As Miss Aspinwall, therefore, guided her new guest from one person to another, he followed them with a burning gaze, that presently took on a new fire as he perceived them turning toward himself and his now self-possessed and apparently expectant companion.

"Mr. Degraw," remarked Miss Aspinwall, refraining for various reasons from raising her eyes to the gaze which might have proved a warning to her had she met it, "allow me to present to you a gentleman of your own name, if not of your artistic calling. Our friend is the painter of whose works you must often have heard." She explained, turning to the gentleman at her side, "It was on account of his presence that I manifested such surprise upon your introduction."

"You are very pardonable," replied the stranger, politely. "I have heard of Mr. Degraw many times, and am truly glad to meet him."

The artist frowned. What was there in this person that commanded respect even from one who had every reason to believe him to be a villain? Was it his manner? It was perfect; but that the artist had been led to expect. Or was it his eye, which, if ardent, had a clearness that was uncommon, and a face which, if prejudice had not stood between him and its possessor, would have made him his undoubted admirer. The mystery of the thing chafed him. Not calculating his words, he replied, with scarcely veiled sarcasm:

"And I have heard of this gentleman many times." Then, seeing that the other did not wince, he added:

"I think," she remarked, smilingly to the artist, "that you have allowed yourself to forget that when I withdrew from the operative stage, I dropped my stage-name. I was Signorina Valdi, Mr. Degraw." This to the stranger, by now—She paused, for the artist had made her an unmistakable gesture—a gesture which caused her to turn pale, but which did not hinder her from finishing the phrase which she had begun. "But now," she persisted, "it is as Jennie Rogers I am known both here and elsewhere."

It was done. The stranger looked relieved; the artist, discouraged. If safety lay for her under the incognito the latter had attempted to improvise for her, she had thrown that safety aside. Did she realize it? There was no token of the fact in her face, which was upturned to the stranger with confidence and content engraved upon its every lineament. Troubled at the sight, her lower turned to Miss Aspinwall, and drawing her a step away, said, anxiously:

"You must excuse any seeming rudeness which you may observe in me. I have no confidence in him. Why, I cannot tell you now but, believe me, the reason was good and such as you would pardon." Then, as he saw the person alluded to was too busy with her new acquaintance to notice this little side-talk, he added, hastily: "Be sure he is the person alluded to in his letter of introduction before you show him too much attention. If he is the man I have every reason to believe him—"

But here the stranger turned and the artist was forced to leave his sentence uncompleted. Perhaps it was as well. A full knowledge of her guest's identity would only have hopelessly embarrassed Miss Aspinwall and made the remainder of the evening unbearable. Whereas, now, it passed off without any marked constraint, though those who knew the hostess best were aware that all was not as it should be, either with her or the

WhyNot be Well and Strong

When weak and run down DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD will help you back to health.

This letter tells of two women who have proven this.

Mrs. D. Stott, Cobourg, Ont., writes: "After recovering from typhoid fever I was left in a very low state of health. I was weak, nervous and not fit to do any work. A friend of mine, Mrs. G. M. Brown, had used DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD and told me that it benefited her wonderfully. I took courage and began the use of the medicine. After taking the first box I began to feel an improvement in health and now after using four boxes I am completely cured. I now feel like myself once more and believe that I can attribute the cure to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food."

Life is too short to spend weeks or months dragging out a miserable existence of weakness and suffering. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cures by forming new nerve blood and building up the system. You can depend on it to benefit you, 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, at all dealers or Edmansons, Belts & Co., Toronto.

stranger. The doubt evoked by the artist's broken words remained in her eyes, and though the stranger did not remark it, others did, and were either pleased or displeased according to the character of the impression which he had made upon them.

Ten o'clock came and with it the departure of this gentleman, who for one reason or another, occupied the attention of every one present. When he rose to go—he had been talking for some time to a group of girls, though his attention did not seem to be with them, but with the face and figure of the beautiful signorina sitting a short distance from him, in her old place on the wide window-seat—there was an actual stir of relief from all sides. And yet no one in the room, not excepting even the handsome artist, looked more nearly the beau ideal of manhood, than this man with his tall and imposing figure, strong face and courtly expression.

"Leave," said he, to the hostess, "with thanks for my kindly reception here. Though I have been told much of the charms of Great Barrington, I had not heard that its advantage of natural scenery were more than equalled by its opportunities for the highest social intercourse."

And such was the grace and seeming candor of his words, that Miss Aspinwall forgot for the moment her doubts, and gave him one of those lovely smiles which were seldom accorded to the most welcome guest.

"I shall do myself the honor of calling again," he thereupon remarked, and before she had time to recover from the embarrassment which these words called forth, he had made his bow and left; but not without casting one more look at the signorina.

The instant his departing step was heard on the gravel-walk without, a murmur of voices broke forth.

"How peculiar!"

"What a gentleman!"

"I wonder if he can be a case of love at first sight!"

"Two Degraws in the field!"

At which last ejaculation the hostess turned pale, though she tried to keep up her spirits on this, perhaps, the most trying evening of her life.

In the window-recess another hurried and passionate colloquy was going on.

"Oh, my love," the artist was saying, "I tried to save you from this man. He is the wretch who has made so many Jenny Rogerses unhappy. Perhaps you have not read the papers, and perhaps you did not know that persons of your name are at present under a sort of ban, and I knew it and knew that from the very similarity between his name and mine that he was the person most to be dreaded by you. Yet you would not take the hint I gave you, but insisted upon owing to your real name, and not content with that, allowed him to address you and even to engage you in conversation."

"And has any harm come from it, or will any harm come? I have heard of some of the stories you speak of, but there was nobody to tell me that there was anything in this gentleman to wear. Nor can I believe there is. You are laboring under a mistake, or look with prejudiced eyes upon one who seems to infringe upon your rights by bearing the same name."

"Do you plead for him, signorina? Has he imposed on you, too, by his devilish urbanity and hypocritical smiles? I will not believe it. He may turn the heads of school-misses and factory girls, but surely not yours. Why, he is a murderer, possibly."

"Oh, no!" she exclaimed, hotly, and would have said more; but just then Miss Aspinwall approached them, and pressed the artist to finish the revelations which he had been interrupted in making to her earlier in the evening. But he had lost the desire to speak. Something in the signorina's manner betrayed such unbounded trust in the stranger, that he felt it would be waste of breath to reiterate his suspicions, while to brand the stranger as an adventurer and criminal in the presence of a company who had already received him as an equal, was, in the absence of other proof than that which had been urged against himself, a manifest risk and possible shame. His reply, therefore, was less uncompromising than Miss Aspinwall had anticipated.

THERAPION is a registered trademark of the three numbers required, and observed that the word "THERAPION" appears on British Government stamps (in white letters on a red ground) affixed to every package by order of His Majesty's Hon. Commissioners, and without which it is a forgery.

"I was about to warn you," said he, "against this Mr. Degraw, not because I know him, but because a gentleman of his name and mine has earned a very doubtful reputation in New York. Though it is hard to believe that this person is the one who has engaged the attention of the police, still my fears are such that I could not refrain from giving you a hint of them. That is all, Miss Aspinwall. I now consider my duty in this regard at an end."

She took out of her pocket the note which the stranger had brought forth. "This seems entirely on edge," she remarked. "I know the writer well, and I know his signature. He recommends Mr. Degraw to me as a gentleman of family and distinction. To doubt that this is true is to doubt the knowledge or judgment of my friend. This I cannot do; so I must still continue to receive Mr. Degraw."

The artist bowed and waived the subject. He felt himself in a false position, and hated his own precipitancy, while at the same time he found it impossible to dismiss his doubts. He was also troubled by the smiles and beaming aspect of the signorina. If she loved him, could she or would she halt this manifest triumph of his rival?

But did she love him? Had the tide he believed to be turning in his favor received a check, and would he be obliged to add to the list of the possible wrongs committed by this interloper, the sudden nipping in its bud of the purest passion-flower that ever blossomed from a poet's heart or evolved itself from a poet's dream?
