What Bolshevism Is And Does.

To proclaim publicly that Europe cannot exist with Russia, is to admit that Europe, in some sense, cannot survive without accepting Russia's terms. To make a compact with the Moscow autocracy it was necessary, as a first step, to make peace with the principles of Bolshevism. That was Lenin's price for restoring Europe, says David Jayne Hill, in "The North American Review."

And what is Bolshevism? It is a destructive, retrogressive, movement, inflated and perpetuated by violence, which has placed in the hands of a few desperate men the destinies of a vast empire. Having destroyed the motives as well as the machinery for the multiplication of the means of well-being and happiness in Russia, it operates only by the division of the little that remains. It has no plan of its own for restoring the capacity of the nation for production. It simply appropriates the proceeds of the past and aims to extend its area of expropriation. It takes all, but gives nothing. It is Nihilism translated into practice.

Having failed utterly in the area of its present control, Bolshevism seeks a bid from the outside. Having ruined Russia, it appeals to Europe. Having already exhausted the treasure extorted from its possessors by bloodshed and terror and harvested from the sacramental vessels of the Church, this oligarchy of brigandage and assassination is now endeavoring to the same that to revolutionize the rest of the world through its propaganda and to wring from the chaff-corn of its legal authority an admission of its legal authority to the material means to carry on its procedure.

That Bolshevism entertains a desire to aid in the reconstruction of Europe it has endeavored to destroy is incredible. Such a reconstruction is, on the contrary, an achievement it purposes to prevent by weakening Europe through division. For this purpose it is ready to enter into economic partnership with the rest of the world, or more precisely with portions of Western Europe, in order that by creating rivalries and jealousies it may the more effectively destroy it.

The Superstitious Sneeze

Among many primitive peoples a sneeze signified the critical moment at which an apparition became visible or a danger had passed. It was the occasion for congratulations and good wishes, just as it still is among the "civilized" whites to-day. When one barbaric monarch sneezed the word was quickly passed along by word of mouth until all the subjects had been informed, and on the letter then made solemn wishes for his Majesty's health.

At another African court the courtiers turned their backs and slapped themselves on the thigh at the royal sneeze. In a third country, at the sneeze of any important personage, those within earshot fell to their knees, kissed the ground, and wished the sneezer all manner of good luck. The Roman Emperor Tiberius made all hands salute him whenever he sneezed, but this seems to have been a personal matter, for Pliny had never the like.

The Greek's Feather.
 Among the ancient Greeks artificial sneezing produced doubtless with a feather, was used for a variety of troubles—hicoughs, cramps in the nasal passages, headaches, and difficulties in the Middle Ages, and, after the introduction of tobacco, snuff was used in a variety of disorders. Sneezing powders were also in common use, and attempts were made to break up epileptic seizures by their exhibition.

Certain people believed that sneezing by a sick man was of bad prognostic significance, while others took the exactly opposite view that if a sneeze could not be provoked the patient could not recover. In 1817 Double, a writer on symptomatology, believed that both prognostics could hold good, according to the case.

Her Reason.

"I won't take it!" she cried with gusto. "I will have none of your money!"

"This is unusual, Serenica," he said mildly. "Did you not kindly accept a diamond pendant from me only three days ago? Did I not give you a five-pound note the day before yesterday, which you kept?"

"I won't have it, I tell you. Take back your money! I hate it."

"Why, Serenica, what is the meaning of this? Have you gone mad?" he asked, with concern.

"I don't want your money! I won't have it! Take it back! I—"

"And only this afternoon, Serenica," he reminded her reproachfully, "you graciously allowed me to confer a radium bracelet on you."

"There it is!" she stormed, and flung it on the floor.

"Honey!" he called, and, with a wild and joyous leap, snatched the bracelet up from the floor.

"The first time she ever gave me anything back in fifteen years!" he cried, and hugged the bracelet closer.

But before he got out of the room with it he—woke up!

For years I have never considered my stock of household remedies complete unless a bottle of Minard's Liniment was included. For burns, bruises, sprains, frostbites or chilblains it excels, and I know of no better remedy for a severe cold in the head, or that will give more immediate relief, than to inhale from the bottle through the nasal organ.

And as to my supply of veterinary remedies it is essential, as it has in very many instances proven its value. A recent experience in reclaiming what was supposed to be a lost section of a valuable cow's udder has again demonstrated its great worth, and prompts me to recommend it in the highest terms to all who have a herd of cows, large or small. I think I am safe in saying among all the patent medicines there is none that covers as large a field of usefulness as does Minard's Liniment. A real trust-in-good for man or beast.

Wanted to Find Out.

Mr. Wiggles, who has a polite way of being rude to persons who deserve it, was paid a visit the other morning by an undesirable, who usually broke into Wiggles's privacy regardless of all etiquette. This morning, however, owing to the mat being occupied by a large dog, he paused and knocked.

"Walk right in," called Wiggles, "don't mind the dog."

"But will he bite?" was asked cautiously.

"That's what I want to find out," was the reply. "I only bought him yesterday."

Too Much Hurry.

During a lecture a well-known authority on economics mentioned the fact that in one country the number of men was larger than that of women, and he added humorously:—

"Can therefore recommend the ladies to emigrate to that part of the world."

A young lady seated in one of the front rows got up in great indignation and was leaving the room rather noisily, whereupon the lecturer remarked:—

"I did not mean that it need be done in such a hurry as that."
