CHAPTER XII.

BARNARD HAYSE SHANS A TOOL FOR HIS PURPOSE.

"Take my advice, Sam—don't touch the cue. Keep to your own line, for there you are unsurpassed. Now, I have a job for you."

"Whew! that's how the wind blows, is it? D—n it, Hayes, you owe me a toss of brandy for giving my nerves such a shake."

brandy for giving my nerves such a shake."

"Time enough for that. Let us come to business first. I tell you I have a job for you. Are you open to it?"

"Never was more so," replied Lorton. "What sort of a job is it?—tat, I hope? If so, I'm your man all the keener."

"You don't ask whether it is safe or dangerous?"

"Because I needn't. I know you are a lawyer, and therefore too cautious to take up anything dangerous. I also know that if any wreekage occurred you would do your best to pull me through the scrape."

"But I mean personally dangerous," said Hayes.

"Personally dangerous," repeated Lorton, contemptuously. "Why, I rather like that; it's as good as sauce to meat. I look on a job that has no danger or adventure as a tame affair."

"Ah," said Hayes, rubbing his hands with satisfaction. "Then you'll have, perhaps, abundance of both in this enterprise that I wish you to undertake."

"And what is the enterprise? Out with it, and in as few words as you like. I don't relish your roundabout lawyers' lingo."

"Well, this is it. But of course, Lor-

"Well, this is it. But of course, Lorton, you are to be trusted?"
"Never blowed the gaff yet, and never shall. You ought to know that of me, My. Haves."

shall. You ought to know that of me, Mr. Hayes."

"So I do. Well, listen. There's an estate in Yorkshire which should come to a client of mine, and the only thing to prevent it doing so is a private marriage between other parties, which took place many years ago. If this marriage be proved my client will lose the estate; if it can't be proved, she gains it."

"She," echoed Lorton. "Then your client is a woman?"

"Yes; but don't mind that just now. I say, if the marriage can be proved, she loses the estate. Now, we don't want the marriage to be proved,"

"Of course, not—quite natural. But I'm in the dark yet. How can I keep the

"Of course, not—quite natural. But I'm in the dark yet. How can I keep the marriage from being proved, for that, I take it, is the job you have for me?"

"That is the job," returned the lawyer. "And how you can do it you will see presently. There is just one man in the world who knows and can tell where the marriage took place."

Lorton nodded.

"If the opposite party get hold of that man my client's chamee is lost."

"Ah, I see; you want him at first—a case of bribery? Well, can't you get hold of him without me?"

"He can't be brited, Sam."

"Can't he?"

"No. The moment he gets an inkling of what is wanted he goes to the other side to a dead certainty."

"Ah, I see. You want me to bring him to your side to a dead certainty. Ha, ha, I've hit it, haven't I?"

"A shrewd guess, Sam. I told you you are no fool, except at the gaming table. In a case of this kind you are a match for a dozen Tariton Tous. And now that you have get a glimpse of the sort of thing wanted, are you ready to take it in hand?"

Lorton both his repulsive face on his breast for a moment and cogitated.

Mr. PETRIE takes this opportunity to thank the Public for their large and libe-ral support during the seven years he ha been in business in Guelph.

The New Store is the one formerly oc-cupied by Mr. H. Berry, and lately by Mr. J. R. Porte, as a Confectimery Store. The store has been enlarged and refitted, making it a much more desirable place of business than the old stand.

Having secured the new store for a term of Ten Years, I hope, with the assistance of the Public, to prevent in the future as I have done during the past seven years any monopoly in the Drug Trade i Guelph:

I have removed my stock to the new store, where business will only be conducted in future.
