AN UNFORTUNATE MODEL.

The Minister Meant Well But Was Unfamiliar With the Ways of the World. A story is told of a minister who is the principal of a private school for boys in one of the little villages up the Sound. Since the good man gave up active church work for the more lucrative business of preparing the sons of wealthy parents for college he has become more liberal in his views and prides himself on being familiar with modern thought. It is his constant practice to take his boys out on little trips to let them see for themselves how the world is advancing day by day. One of these recent excursions was to a kindling-wood establishment.

"You must excuse this intrusion, my dear sir," said the minister to the superintendent, "but I take great interest in manual training schools and I have persuaded a number of my scholars to so company me to your factory so that they can see for themselves just how the wood is prepared for use."

'I will show you around with the greatest of pleasure, sir," replied the life to litrature?" superintendent. "That young man you see bundling the wood is the most expert worker I have. He is a genius in his way and I wouldn't part with him for the world. So valuable are his services to me, that in addition to his salary I give him a share of the profits." Here was such an opportunity for a little sermon that the minister turned to the scholars and said: "You have heard boys, what this gentleman has said. Let it be a lesson to you. There is always room at the top of the ladder, and the surest way to get there is to study the interest of your employers. Let this young man be your model in life. May I ask, sir," he went on addressing the superintendent, "in what special way he is so invaluable to

"He's a dandy, and no mistake" replied the superintendent, with a great deal of pride. "I've had hundreds of young men before him, but he beats them all. There isn't a man in the business who can make up a bundle and use so few sticks of wood in it as that young fellow.
