Grim Story of The Fighting On The Western Front.

Of all the stories that have come from the western battlefields, none, perhaps, has given such a concise and enlightening account of the technical details of a "wave" attack, which official and unofficial reports mention in every despatch, as the one published in the December number of Popular Mechanics Magazine under this head. But it gives much more than that. It is full of dramatic, not to say tragic, human-interest anecdote.

The story was told to the anonymous writer by the sole survivor of one of the incidents related, and every word of it bears evidence of its truth. Indeed it is so lifelike that it might well be called a moving picture in words. The very first paragraph puts the reader right into the trenches with the actors. To quote:

"I counted four of them, and all I could see at any one time was about 30 yards of trench The truth of it was that we all were near the border line of insanity from the suspense, and these four were four were weaker links that couldn't stand the stress. All along the line it was just the same, for every man knew IT was coming, and yet did not know when. IT stood for "zero hour," the moment our big attack was to start."

After relating some queer instances of mental aberration in the heat of battle, the story goes on:

"Somehow or other an incident like that brings home the hideous reality of war stronger to me than ever the ear-breaking thunder of heavy shells, for it emphasizes the strain that we all are having to bear. One sees every detail, while in the more active moments of conflict the mind is blessedly oblivious to most everything but the footing and the aim.

"And the worst of it is that these weak ones that go under often take others with them. Ches Wight finished himself and Carney, and I thought for two hours that I was gone ,too. The three of us went over the top one night—Monday morning about 3 o'clock, to be exact—to determine whether or not the Germans had evacuated their first-line trench.

"Wight, Carney, and I crept out. Heavy clouds covered the whole sky, not even letting the glimmer of a star through, so the time was ideal for reconnoitering. We had covered about 40 of the 70 yards, and were beginning to head gutterals now and then, when suddenly I smelled garlic—not cooking, but the stench that comes from the breath of a person who has been eating it.

"I touched Carney on the leg and he signalled to Wight, who was just beyond. That same instant we saw the Hun, a hulking shadow, creeping towards us and very near. The three of us put an end to his scouting duty and without much noise. We just made sufficient, however, in chocking him, to arouse the trench ahead of us. Stealthy sounds came up of many men scrambling to the edge.

"We could have no further doubt that the trench still was occupied, so Carney and I started back without more ado. We could not see Wight, but thought, of course, that he was at the side of us. Just as we were twenty feet from home, however, we heard a blood-curdling yell behind us. Outlined roughly against the lesser blackness of the sky came Wight, running an waving his arms.

"A commotion arose in our trench. As Wight charged on, our sentries, evidently mistaking him for the van of a German surprise attack, opened fire and brought him down. Carney and I both lost our heads for a second and started up. That was enough for Carney. He went down with four Canadian bullets through him. One shot cut through the skin on my arm just above the elbow, and it brought back sense to me. I dropped flat.

"For the next two hours I remained without moving, afraid to attempt to make the trench before the dawn guard was posted. I tried to call the attention of one of the sentries, but to no avail. I knew that the barrels of thirty rifles and two machine guns were hanging over the edge, pointed in my general direction, waiting for more Germans.

"With the first streaks of dawn I gathered all my courage and called my captain by name, and then each of the officers in turn. Then I crawled in, to be met by a very suspicious sentry, who had great difficulty in recognizing me.

"Three days later I found out that Wight had apparently gone daft upon overcoming the German we met out on the waste. He had stopped to search the body, and then had donned the helmet of our adversary,, and started a charge all by himself—and in the direction of our trenches.

"The twist of psychology is hard to understand, perhaps, but it is common. Once in a big university football match I saw the captain lose his head in this manner and forgot which goal his own team was defending, but it's always seems to border on the spooky to me."

WHAT BRITAIN DOES.

(Southern Lumberman.)

Many changes and imrovements have been made in Bagdad and vicinity since the capture of that city by the British forces last March. The river banks have been repaired; the River Euphrates has been made navigable and floods prevented for the first time in centures; two railroads have been built from the mouth of the Tigris River and are being extended as far north of Bagdad. A swamp of forty-eight square miles has been reclaimed and converted into wheat fields, gardens and dairy and poultry farms by farmers from India who supply to British forces and who are preparing to export food to England.

Bagdad, in Asiatic Turkey, was the capital of the "vilayet" or province of Bagdad. The city is situated on the Tigris River, some distance above the junction of the Euphrates. Bagdad was founded in the year 763.

"I haven't had a bite for two days," whined the tramp.

"Neigher have I," responded the summer boarder, according to the Louisville Courier-Journal. "Rotten fishing around here."

N. B. FARMERS CALLED ON

nicipalities were empowered through temporary loans to provide food, fuel, seed or necessities. The city of St. John has already availed themselves of this, and coal was purchased and delivered in small quantities where required. The Department of Agriculturt will locate and secure the necessary supply of seed grain and then it can be delivered to the municipalities in car load lots at cost and be distributed according to regulations arranged.

Farmers who have a supply of good seed grain are urgently requested not to grind the grain, but reserve it for seed purposes and notify the department immediately re the varieties and quantities they have for sale.

The foregoing paragraphs indicate the seriousness of the situation. It is a situation that demands concerted action on the part of every farmer in the province. The plan of campaign therein outlined is one that is workable and one that has the approval of men who have given he situation their most careful attention. The farmers of the province and others who may read these paragraphs are urgently requested to give the matter all the publicity they can. Our soldiers must have bread, and when the supply runs low they must have their first consideration or calamity will surely fall upon us and upon gerenations that are to follow.

Help to avoid a wide world calamity. Do not leave it to the other fellow. Do your part, and having done so, strive to induce others to follow your example before sheer necessity, self preservation and the pangs of famine compel more drastic measures, and our children cry for bread when there is no bread.

"I see they have recruited several clergymen for the aviation corps," remarked the incurable talker, as reported in the Harvard Lampton.

"As sky-pilots, I take it."

"No, as birds of pray."

Hurrah! How's This

Cincinnati authority says corns dry up and lift out with fingers.

Hospital records show that every time you cut a corn you invite lockjaw or blood poison, which is needless, says a Cincinnati authority, who tells you that a quarter ounce of a drug called freezone can be obtained at little cost from the drug store but is sufficient to rid one's feet of every hard or soft corn or callus.

You simply apply a few drops of freezone on a tender, aching corn and soreness is instantly relieved. Shortly the entire corn can be lifted out, root and all, without pain.

This drug is sticky but dries at once and is claimed to just shrivel up any corn without inflaming or even irritating the surrounding tissue or skin.

If your wife wears high heels she will be glad to know of this.

How to Purify the Blood

"Fifteen to twenty drops of Extract of Roots, commonly called Mother Seigel's Curative Syrup, may be taken three times with meals and at bedtime for the cure of indigestion, constipation and bad blood. Persistence in this treatment will effect a cure in nearly every case. Get the genuine at druggists.

Let it be clearly understood that "trench feet" are not cold feet.
