

THE TORONTO WORLD.

One-Cent Morning Newspaper.

OFFICE: 15 KING ST. EAST, TORONTO

Subscription Rates: One Year $1.00, Six Months .60, Three Months .35.

Advertising Rates: For each line of copy, 10 cents per week.

FRIDAY MORNING, DEC. 4, 1884.

The English Crisis.

Once more the star of Mr. Gladstone is in the ascendant, and he seems this time to have overcome for good the worst of his difficulties.

The Police Investigation. The World does not see or believe that there are no flaws in the police department of this city.

Mr. Gladstone can look back on several important political achievements in his long career, including the disestablishment of the Irish church.

Mr. Moody's Visit and its Lessons. Much of Mr. Moody's mode of procedure is open to grave criticism. He is a revivalist, and emotional (let us call it) is the badge of all his tribe.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.

And practicalness, that the ordinary owners of our pulpits fall. They may be, and doubtless are, firmly convinced of the truth of what they preach.

With good fortune of the law. Still every public institution should be above suspicion, and those stories continually set afloat about the Central Prison should be officially disposed of.

Certain old English laws have not lost all their savor yet, even upon this side of the Atlantic.

The Globe relates as something extraordinary that the state of Maine has a law of imprisonment for debt.

Now that the Moody manifestation is over, calm observers will begin to look for results. The excitement of a revival is all very good in its way.

Some estimable friends of Mr. Moody appear to have been shocked because the reporter of The World, in his off-hand, half-humorous sketch of the great evangelist, mentioned that he was wealthy and took a pride in fast horses.

It is not likely that the extreme penalty for murder will be executed upon the British sailors who killed and ate a companion in process upon ambitious Irish rivalry.

Yes! An Associate Member. Editor World: I observe in your editorial headed "Dr. Ellis and City Water," you say "The secretary pointed out on Monday night that not only theorists, but those of whom sanitation was a matter of practical import—e. g. householders—were the very persons whom the association would welcome as, at all events, associate members."

Editor World: It would seem that no one who desires to do good, and to see good done, could object to anything that Mr. Moody said in his discourse this afternoon.

The Globe's Trade of Yesterday. The Globe's trade of yesterday against Sir David Macpherson is considered in the most puzzling features of this puzzling question.

Now, here is the predicament which some earnest souls are in—they acknowledge the life, but are obliged by their own reason to reject a certain portion of the doctrine preached.