

It will never be possible to solve the problem of lighting and ventilating dwellings where houses are built in rows. The time is coming when, in this country, it will be considered a civic crime to build houses in rows, in which the only idea is to crowd as much dwelling as possible into as small a space as may be, paying attention only to the architectural adornment of the fronts.

—Harvey W. Wiley, M.D.