

The same is true of every member of the staff. This should add to the reputation of the College as a whole.

I have detailed the various publicity agencies we have, and do not wish to repeat, but if a farmer reads the official organ, if he belongs to a farmers' club, or society, every month a message comes to them from the College. Our short courses have been advertised in every railway station and post office and school in the English speaking districts, and I have detailed other agencies. All English rural papers frequently run our advertisements of short courses, etc. To those who do not read agricultural papers, government reports, local papers, etc., Macdonald College may not be known. Further, the School for Teachers has sent out through the Province hundreds of teachers, all of whom know something of our activities, and doubtless inform others.

7. The School of Agriculture is yet too young for tradition. Graduates are apt to make hasty judgments, many have not heard both sides, criticism in general is one of personal liking and disliking, and in this connection, I beg to draw to your attention the Report of a Royal Commission on the Ontario Agricultural College, held in 1892, which investigated statements of this kind. One example from this report. A graduate made the statement that lack of harmony between the President and the staff had prevented thousands of students from coming to the College. When examined on oath, he was asked to name some of the thousands, and eventually
