wouldn't be surprised if there were a million this year at the Great Canadian National Exhibition. Everybody may go with the assurance of seeing a decidedly better show than last year-better in every department, fresher, cleaner, more up to date, bigger, more interesting and almost certain to tempt you back again.

Salutations to Manager Orr! Con-Salutations to Manager Orr! Congratulations to Honorary President McNaught! Felicitations to Acting President George! Toronto is proud. Nobody was ever known who had seen all of the Toronto fair—not even the energetic manager. One has only two weeks to do it in. There are people who could not go to the poultry building without assistance and who would need a guide to Society Row. But this is not so remarkable when one considers the 70 or 80 different structures which compose the exhibition buildings. They were all full yesterday and all going, and even before Sir William touched the authoritative button there were crowds on the grounds. The figures ran to 21,000 before night, the largest on record for a first day except when Prince Louis of Battenberg was in attendance at last year's opening.

Was the grand stand a success? Certainly it was—a grand success. The celebrated "Ivanhoe" spectacle, with its Plantagenet romance from the brave days of old, was beautifully staged and dressed, and the host of supernumeraries with their intricate old world dances and drill evolutions, and the quaint costumes of knight and squire, bowman and churt, mistress and maid from the twelfth century, might have all trooped out of Abbetsford at the mandate of the Wizard of the North all trooped out of Abbetsford at the mandate of the Wizard of the North himself. The fireworks were finer than ever, and it is a puzzle to the unversed in pyrotechnic mysteries how the Messrs. Hand are able to invent their new sensations. The novelties this year were beautiful and striking, and there was no stint of the fine old effects.

In the work of judging the women's In the work of judging the women's building, classes 250 to 261 were considered and awards made. Class 241 in honey was also judged.
