HAMILTON, Thursday, March 30.— One of the most gratifying features of the campaign of the 120th Hamilton Bat-One of the most gratifying features of the campaign of the 120th Hamilton Battalion is that the unit is now over the one thousand mark, as a result of the splendid response that has been made so far this week. Fifty accepted men a day until the end of the week will bring the battalion up to full strength, and the recruiting officers are confident that the object will be attained. All the large fastories will be visited in turn, and good results are expected. The recruiting depots had a good day yesterday, and out of 73 men who applied for overseas service 40 were accepted. The Tigers passed 16 men and the 120th signed up 13. The 173rd unit accepted 11.

Russell Smith, manager of the Hamilton Rowing Club; Samuel Male, the well-known commercial traveler, and Charles E. Hampson, superintendent of the Hamilton Stencil Company, signed up as privates with the 205th. Lieut, John Jolly, who recently obtained his certificate, also enlisted as a private in the 47th Battery of Toronto.

More Guns Arrive.

It was announced yesterday by Lieut. Colonel W. W. Stewart of the 86th Machine Gun Battalion, that 12 more machine guns had been received, bringing the number of guns in the battalion up to 20. The full complement of machine guns is 125, but these are not expected until the unit is almost ready to go overseas.

One building will be branch library, which will be erected if Andrew Carnegie is willing to give assistance. The other institution is a new technical school. The mayor stated yesterday that the buildings would be erected to harmonize, so that they could be placed together for the beautifying of the city.

Kenneth William MacLennan, well known resident of Hamilton, died suddenly yesterday. For the past three years he held the position of probationery officer at the inland revenue department. He was formerly an employe of Buntin, Gillies and Company, and was for some years secretary of the Conservative party in the west end of the city.

Succeeded in Catching Overhanging Trees and Getting Away From Danger.

At 6.30 last night, or within 24 hours lmost to a minute after the collapse of the east and west span of the Bloor street bridge, the centre and remainng span went out with a crash, and was swept down the Humber for a short distance, grounding on a big floe at a point farther east and south. Between 15 and 20 people who had made their way across the ice from the westerly bank were on the span when it began to move out, and a wild rush was made for the opposite bank and safety. All escaped over the ice but safety. All escaped over the ice but two lads, who were making the crossing below the site of the ruined bridge. They were carried down for the best part of a quarter of a mile, and finally succeeded in catching hold of the limbs of overhanging trees and making their way over the hummocks to the east bank of the river. bank of the river.

Hundreds of people walked from the end of the Bloor street car line and up Jane street from the lake front to see in the Humber Valley what is said to be the sight of a lifetime. In many places along the bed of the river the ice is piled up anywhere from 15 to 20 feet, and the whole valley is literally buried under millions of tons of it. Further up stream, at Woodbridge, the lower part of the town was re-ported last night as being still under water, the cellars being flooded, and some of the streets covered with water. Dynamite was used to clear one of the bridges from the masses of ice. Warden Knowles, Reeve Griffith of York Township, Deputy-Reeve George Padget of Markham, and Assistant Engineer Gaul, all county men, were that the British troops have consolidated all the ground which they captured south of St. Eloi on Monday, March 27. The Germans sprang a small mine east of Bethune without doing damage to the British positions.

Attacking the French with large effectives yesterday, the Germans gained a footing in an advanced work situated north of Malancourt, and they captured two houses in this village. About the only effect of this are they captured two houses in this village. About the only effect of this extremely minor success will be to have something to sound big in the German official communique, which will probably run like this: "We cleared the French from a two or three kilometre front and advanced our lines into fore the legislature prorogued, Peterson of the property of the pro cellently well, but it has little meaning on the French front, where ruins of villages are death-traps rather than defences. Surround a city or a village with walls and forts and give it a resonant name and its fate is written in large letters in the minds of men. But dig a deep and dirty ditch in the mud, and, altho it will take far greater effort to capture it than it does to batter down houses or forts with heavy guns and so make them untenable, the fate of this ditch will be entirely disregarded by the men who

In the Avocourt wood the French neatly filched a redoubt which the Pierce telephoned me and said: 'You can get that, the bill is withdrawn.' Germans had taken pains to fortify in their usual elaborate manner. The fighting northeast of this wood at Malancourt is hardly of sufficient magnitude to earn the dignity of being regarded as a continuation of the Verdun offensive. The Germans are probably trying to liven up their infantry, which has become stale, owing to its long sojourn behind hedges and

The sudden advent of the general spring thaw on the Russian front will force a virtual suspension of grand operations for several weeks. In the light of the nearness of spring, which was anticipated by the Russian higher command, a reason can be assigned for the recent fighting on the front held by Von Hindenburg. It is probably this: When the Germans, failing to secure a strategic line by their checks before Dvinsk and Riga, sat down to spend the winter, they and the Austrians erected redoubts on all the higher ground, fortifying these with great ingenuity and a great number of guns and trench mortars. The Russians chose the moment for attacking these positions from the higher to the lower ground, where they would suffer most from the spring inundations.

The Russians report from the coast sector of the Caucasus front that the Turks completely failed to dislodge their troops from the heights of the left bank of the Oghera Dere River, near Trebizond, and that the Turks then retreated, leaving behind prisoners and a gun. Terrible losses, the Russians say, were suffered by the Turks. The Russian centre, which is advancing towards Erzignan, also reports the taking of prisoners.

A victory of considerable importance has just been won by the Italians. The Austrians started the fighting, which lasted 40 hours, by seizing trenches on the heights northwest of Gorizia. The Italian centre bulged back, but did not give way, and the wings held firm. The Austrians were beaten back and the front restored. On this front the enemy seems now only able a maintain the defensive by repeatedly attacking, the Italian pressure on his lines having become so great.
