

E LAKE RANCH

N GREGORY.

under his coat had been torn off, his revolver wrenched away and the highwayman, his face masked with a red bandana handkerchief, had run into the thick timber.

Charlie just walked in, feeling like a "drunken man," Tripp concluded. "His fall and a rap over the head with a gun-butt have made him pretty sick. I am sending out a posse of men from this end to try and get the stick-up man. You'd better do the same up there."

For a moment Judith sat staring at the telephone dully. Robbed of a thousand dollars, and in broad daylight! A thing like this had not occurred on the Blue Lake for a dozen years.

"Bayne Trevors!" she gasped. For suddenly, she thought that she understood the significance of the rumor which had twice in a week come to her. Perhaps, as Tripp himself had said, she was getting nervous. Trevors himself was on the ranch right now. Trevors was here with triple purpose. To carry favor with Hampton against a possible need of it, to establish an ally for himself, to witness Judith's discomfort, when at 8 o'clock she must turn the men away with an excuse.

CHAPTER VIII.

RIFLE SHOTS FROM THE CLIFFS.

Thank Heaven, it was just noon. Judith sprang to her feet, her eyes bright and hard, and ran down to the men's quarters. Coming up from the corral were Carson and Bud Lee.

"Miller, with the pay-roll money, has been held up and robbed at Squaw Creek," she told them swiftly. "Get some men together, Carson, and try to head the robber off."

The two men, having glanced quickly at each other, stood a moment looking at her curiously.

"That's on the level, is it, Miss Judith?" demanded Carson slowly.

"Of course, it's on the level!" she cried impatiently. "Oh, I know what you're thinking. I'm going to phone immediately to the bank at Rocky Bend and have another man sent out with more money. You can count upon getting your pay at 6 o'clock!"

"I told you, didn't I, muttered Carson, 'that I wasn't worrying none personal.' But if I was you'd sure have the money on tap!"

With that he left her, going hastily to round up what men he could find and get them into their saddles. Bud Lee and his eyes still on her, stood where he was.

"Well," demanded the girl, "aren't you going too?" Suddenly angered by his mischievous air, she added, cuttingly: "Not afraid, are you?"

"I was thinking," Lee answered coolly, "that the stick-up play will probably figure on a play like that. If he was real wise, he'd move along toward Rocky Bend and pop off your second man. Two thousand bucks a day would make a real nice little draw."

Judith paused, frowning. There was truth in that. If Trevors really was behind this, he would have chosen his men carefully; he would have planned ahead.

"If you'll do my way," continued Lee, thoughtfully, "I'll have just enough time to roll a smoke and saddle the little old Clint. He's in the stable now. You're not afraid of my doubting crossing you? Even if a smart-headed man had planned the hold-up, he wouldn't figure on a play like this. He'd think we'd have a Rocky Bender bring it out or else wait until tomorrow."

"It won't do," she decided quickly. "I want that money here at 6 o'clock." (Continued tomorrow morning.)
