

VARIETIES.
Beginning of Road-Making.—The infancy of road-making, like that of navigation, must be sought in the infancy of nations. A canoe, hollowed out of the trunk of a tree, was the beginning of ship-building; an Indian's trail, by which an untutored tribe wended their way, in single files, through forest or grassy glade of boundless extent, is the first germ of a road. Conveyance by a quadruped, which rendered necessary the widening of the trail into a sort of bridge-path, formed most likely the second step in the improvement of the road.

Next came the use of carriages, a sledge perhaps first, after that the cart, or sledge, and then wheels, connected by an axle. Then came the double cart, or wagon of four wheels, by which two parallel and transverse axles were connected by a fixed longitudinal one. In principle no improvement beyond this has been made in the construction of carriages, save the moveable joint, which at once, by the facilities it afforded for turning curved lines, dispensed with the necessity of rectilinear roads for large vehicles.—Wade's British History.

LINE ON THE QUEEN.—It is rumored, that just before the budget was introduced to the House of Commons, Lord Melbourne stated to the Queen that the time had come when the state of parties in the house, and of public feeling out of it, made it necessary that the Ministers should resign. On this Her Majesty remonstrated. Lord Melbourne then said, that the only alternative course for the Ministers was to adopt some strong measure such as should be calculated to make a popular ferment in their favour. The Queen, with a wave of her hand, replied, "Any measure!" Hence, it is added, the present proposals of the Ministry originated. We trust Her Majesty knows her duty to her people far too well for this anecdote to be true. We simply state it as we heard it.—[Old England.]

The new style of commencing the year on the first of January, was adopted in France, 1564; in Scotland, 1600; in Denmark, soon after; in Holland, Protestant Germany, and Russia, 1700; in England, 1752; in Sweden, 1753.

Toronto, May 31st.—It was mentioned in town on Saturday that the Public Departments of the Commission of Crown Lands, and the Survey General, had received their "route," and might be expected to leave to-day or to-morrow. It is also an old story that Mr. Edward Wakefield spent some time in Newgate, narrowly escaped transportation, for the abduction of a young lady who is succeeded Mr. Sullivan as Commissioner of Crown Lands.
