Two sisters, the daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Adair, of Malton decided on a double ceremony at Trinity United Church for their spring weddings. Debbie Ann Adair was married to Robert Amundson, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Amundson, of St. Paul, Minn. Cathy Laura Adair married John King, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard King, of Warton. Rev. Cowper-Smith officiated. A reception followed the ceremony at the Malton Legion Branch 528.

Couple choose a Nassau honeymoon

A honeymoon in Nassau followed the wedding of Carol Ann Singleton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs.

George Singleton, of Campbellville, to Michael Arthur Slacer, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Slacer, of Burlington.

Rev. William Hutchinson officiated at the double-ring ceremony at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in Streetsville.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a long white silk organza over taffeta gown with appliqued daisies on the dress and a matching train and long veil. She carried a Victorian flower posy with a large white mum surrounded by feathered carnations in pastel shades to match the gowns of her bridal attendants.

Her matron of honour, Clare Walker, was in a Victorian gown in mauve crepe with a purple velvet floor-length sash and purple rosebuds in her hair. She carried a white floral ball of tinted carnations.

Her bridesmaids, Helen North, Laura Slacer, sister of the groom, Jackie Flexman and Leslie Williamson, wore matching dresses, in shades of pale green, blue, pink and yellow with rosebuds in their hair and with bouquets of tinted carnations. Junior bridesmaid, Diane Waitman was in turquoise with matching flowers.

The ring bearer was Nicholas Singleton, brother of the bride, and the best man was Bill Mathers. Ushers were Howard Singleton, brother of the bride, Andy Flexman, Jon Leaver and Jim Prentice.

The Bolton Legion was the setting for the wedding reception where the bride's mother received guests in a long classic gown of blue lace over crepe. She was assisted by the bridegroom's mother in a long silk gown with black and pink flowers

Consumer Matters

By Judy Flaherty

Bring a bulging wallet when you go shopping for clothes in the fall — clothing costs will soar, especially men's clothes. One estimate is that clothing costs will be up by 50 percent by fall; another, more conservative, estimate I got was a 30 per cent increase.

Why? Because price of fabric, especially wool, has skyrocketed. As with the sudden jump in meat and house prices, it's a question of supply and demand. Demand for wool is up; supply is down.

We are demanding woven goods; there is a swing back to the natural fibres like wool and cotton versus the synthetic fibres. We got away from using so much wool in the last five years or so. Knitted (synthetic) goods seemed like the answer to all our clothing problems.

PROBLEMS

In spite of great comfort and ease of upkeep, synthetic fabrics have some problems. Polyester, a synthetic, has been described as a fabric that's hot in summer and cold in winter. We are disenchanted to discover that synthetics can shrink, stretch, gape, pill, pull and generally lose their shape.

Wool, which is long-lasting, keeps its shape, provides warmth, hangs well and is in demand again — but the supply is limited.

We get most of our wool from Australia. Wool prices, for the last five years, were so depressed that many Australian sheep farmers abandoned their farms and even slaughtered their animals. One Australian source said sheep flocks were reduced by 20 million.

Production can't be vastly increased overnight — they just can't build this kind of crop as fast as demand changes. Japanese buyers, realizing that demand for wool was increasing, bought heavily into the Australian wool market, which has forced the price of the remaining wool up.

I talked to a manufacturer who makes men's sportswear. He didn't paint a very bright picture.

Late in 1972, he paid 92 cents a yard for blended woven fabric. The fabric worked well and he wants to use it again. The best price he can now get for the identical fabric is $1.65 a yard.

Typical of wool increases, he says, are what's predicted for the price of men's suits. An average suit, which is part but not pure wool, retails for around $120. By fall, it will cost at least $300 more.

COTTON

Cotton prices have also jumped, but not as drastically as wool. Last year's cotton crop was bad and this year's was worse because of the Mississippi floods.

I talked to a man from Pennmans the underwear people, who said that although cotton-prices have increased, he doesn't foresee any drastic jump in cottons this fall. Take heart, at least we'll be able to afford underwear.

dear susanne..

Dear Susanne:
My husband and I have been separated for three years because he decided he wanted to live with another woman. He is very good to me financially, gives me a generous allowance and a car, pays my rent and I know I can call on him for anything I need. He doesn't want a divorce and until now I didn't want one either. I have been very lonely and have recently met a man who wants to marry me. I'm not in love with him, but I'm tired of living alone. This man would be good to me but he doesn't excite me or thrill me and I can see us living together in a kind of friendly uneventful marriage. The only trouble is that if I remarry my husband will stop my allowance, and while my future husband makes a fair salary I will have to give up some of the extras I have gotten use to. I don't know whether I should go on the way I am or get married and have someone I know will be faithful to me. I'm not getting any younger and I keep worrying about the future.

Mary J.

Dear Mary:
You would be foolish to marry a man you don't love just because you are lonely. You are bored and probably have too much time to think about yourself. Get busy, get a job do some volunteer work, but stop thinking about your problems. Try to meet people, and you can through your work, through clubs and through friends. If your finances permit, travel. If you don't want to go alone you can always join a tour group where you can meet people with similar tastes and ideas. Don't marry because you feel lonely and jilted. Better to have your privacy than share it with a dullard.

Dear Susanne:
I am 16 and have been going with this boy for two years. He is 22 and is going to be a great musician some day, in fact I think he is already. My parents don't like him, and when he comes to my house they are very rude to him so he doesn't want to come here any more. He wants me to meet him at his friend's apartment but I know my parents would be very upset if they ever found out. I don't want to go against my parents, but I don't want to give up my boyfriend either.

Old for my age.

Dear Old:
At 16 you should be more mature than you sound. As long as you live at home and allow your parents to support you, you have an obligation to them. Have you ever asked your parents what they object to in your boyfriend? Bring it out into the open. You may find that they are correct in their assessment of him. In any case it is important for you to dream. Most parents want only the best for their children.

Mrs. Newby thinks we're an investment company.

Small wonder. Our new name is only a year old. It's a combination of the old Hill the Mover in the east and Security Storage in the west. The big yellow vans with Hill Security on the side may look like money vans to Mrs. Newby but to more and more folk they mean a good, safe way to move, local or long distance. Keep us in mind if you have a move coming up. We'll care for your belongings as if they were cash.
