

McNaught, K.

The Pelican History of Canada. London: Penguin, 1969

This is a brief, thematic treatment of the whole of Canadian history from a moderate leftist position. It is an excellent introductory book.

Wade, M.

The French Canadians. Toronto: MacMillan, 1968, 2 vols.

This is a classic treatment in English of the French-Canadian experience in detailed narrative style.

Bercuson, David J. (ed.)

Canada and the Burden of Unity. Toronto, MacMillan of Canada, 1977

A stimulating collection of recent essays on how "national unity," for the sake of Central Canada, has worked against the interests of the Maritimes and the West.

Creighton, D.G.

The Empire of the St. Lawrence. Toronto, MacMillan, 1937.

Considered by many Canadian historians to be one of the great seminal works. It focuses on the triumphs and defeats of the Montreal Anglophone merchant class in its struggle for commercial dominance in the St. Lawrence Valley and hinterland through the century after the British Conquest.

Creighton, D.G.

The Road to Confederation. Toronto: MacMillan, 1937

One of the standard narrative works on Confederation.

Creighton, D.G.

John A. Macdonald. Toronto: MacMillan 1952 and 1955. 2 vols.

Probably the most distinguished Canadian biography. The country's first and most colourful Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald (1817-1891), is the subject, surrounded by the tribulations of British North American and Canadian politics from the 1840's until his death in 1891.
