

held. The company went with us to the station, and we took our beloved dead with us to Woodstock. Mr. and Mrs. Karn opened their lovely home to us and there the old Woodstock church assembled. There was an impressive service, and we bore her to the burying. We laid her at rest in a beautiful spot in the Baptist cemetery and covered her grave with flowers; and so we left her, and the father and the boys were desolate. Boys, you will always reverence the memory of the gentle lady—so good, so beautiful, so true and so brave.
