Baxter had followed the stream all the morning with indifferent success. Four trout, by far too small to make matters at all interesting, had risen to the fly and now slid about in the creel as he made his way through the underbrush to the open field, where the stream widened and deepened and gave promise of better sport.

At the edge of the field was a wire fence, and posted conspicuously upon it was the notice:

THESE ARE PRIVATE GROUNDS.

No fishing allowed. Trespassers will be prosecuted to the full extent of the law. Baxter read the sign and grunted.

There was no one in sight, and the stream twisting through the field was decidedly tempting. Moreover, four small trout are very unsatisfactory in a creel made to accommodate more and the forbidding black letters on the feate and climbed over it.

Halfway down the field was a little clump of pines through which the stream flowed. Baxter entared the shadows of the trees, and scarcely had he cast when his reel whirre i merrily and the line cut the water sharply. His pulses quickened. Here was figh-ing worth talking about. The Pus-slackened, and he began to reel in Saxter gave no heed until he had hinded the trout; then he turned to find himself face to face with a young woman. She was regarding him steadily, with a little frown of disapproval. A creel hung from a broad strap across her shoulder, and she carried an unjoined rod in a leather case.

Baxter had momentarily forgotten.

Joined rod in a leather case.

Baxter had momentarily forgotten the warning on the fence. Now her words recalled it to his mind. He was evidently caught redhanded at his peaching, and the only thing to do was ta frankly admr it. He looked at the gist before him. She was tall, well formed and undeniably attractive. Indeed she was quite striking as she deed she was quite striking as she stood there calmly awaiting his reply. "You have a permit, of course?" she asked again.

Baxter smiled quietly. "I regret to state," said he, "I am a deep dyed poacher." The girl lifted her brows.

"You must have noticed the signs,"

"You must have noticed the signs," she said.

"I noticed one," said he, "but the stream was too tempting to a man who had landed but four small theut during the morning. I am very sorry that my seal got the better of my discretion, and I offer every apology for my unwarranted intrusion. Whatever the damages are I'll settle. I plead guilty."

"I should be inclined to follow the signs," she said, "and prosecute you "to the full extent of the law" but for the way you just landed that trout. It was splendid and shows you to be an experienced angler. If you'd bungled it I should have let the law do its worst. If you promise not to trespass again you're quite free to go this time."

Baxter bowed.

"You are very generous," he dedared, "which makes me doubly ashnmed of my trespass. Rest assured I shall not repeat the offense. May I ask to whom I'm indebted for allowing me to go unmolested?"
Something in his eyes made the girl fush.

"Oh-it's-it's all right!" she said haltingly. "Now please go-at once."

Still Baxter hesitated. He was not given to pretty speeches nor to staring at young women whom chance threw in his way, but some indefinable charm about the girl made him do the latter and regret his inability to do the former.

"I'm very grateful," he said lamely shough, "and—and"— "And what?" she said almost sharp-

He spoke so earnestly that the girl lushed again. "It's all right," she reiterated. "You've been quite grateful enough.

Baxter, trying vainly to think of some plausible excuse for prolonging the conversation, reeled up his line and began to unjoint the rod.

Suddenly a man came crashing through the bushes and stood before them. The girl gave a little startled ery of dismay. Baxter noticed the man wore leather leggings and was clothed in tweeds. "'As the marster given you fishin'

The man wheeled to the girl.

"'Ave you got one?" he asked.

"N-no." she said humbly, and, without looking at Baxter, she added, evidently for his benefit, "I'm—I'm a poacher too."

Baxter's heart jumped at the words. He mastered an overpowering desire to laugh and turned to the girl. "Well, by George!" was all he managed to say. "It's the marster's order to take you to the house then," said the man solemnly.

"See here"- Baxter began protestingly. "For $2 apiece I'll let you go this time," the man said insinuatingly.

Baxter handed him a $5 bill, and, after warning them to leave at once, the man departed. As the man stumbled back through the bushes Baxter turned to the girl.

"It was frightfully mean of me," she explained. "I thought it would be a great joke to frighten you off by pretending I owned the stream and tending I owned the stream and then fish it myself. Then that frightful man came-and-and-to tell the truth, I should have been dragged to the acuse, for I hadn't a cent of money with me."

She lifted her eyes to his. "Oh, what must you think of me!"
she cried contritely.
But Baxter was laughing happily.

ANNOUNCEMENTS The Bonnie Brier Bush-Mar. 31,

"SWEET CLOVER" WAS GOOD. It is a tribute in itself to any production these Lenten days to see the Grand well filled and the audience much pleased, as was the case at the presentation of "Sweet Clover" last vening.

evening.

This bright and interesting comedy-drama was new to Chatham, but it "made good" all the flattering advance press notices with which it was heralded. The plot is somewhat unique and departs pleasantly from the threadbare path of so many performances. The whole thing is intensely human and enlists the sympathies and sentiment of the audience throughout. The company was an excellent one and their work was well done.

"Sweet Clover" was good-this was "Sweet Clover" was good—this was the universal verdict. But, after all, it was only a bright curtain-raiseer to the production of the Bonnie Brier Bush with Stoddart and Fax next next Friday evening, which promises to be one of the great treats of the season. In fact so many excellent productions are now booked that the dramatic devotee should not miss one.

The able dramatization of an MacLaren's stories of Scotch life, "The Bonnie Brier Bush," with the gifted player, J. H. Stoddart, as Lachlan Campbell, comes to the Grand Opera House Friday, March 31st.

"The Bonnie Brier Bush" is an exposition in four acts of some of the most interesting features and strong dramatic incidents of the book, and mainly treats of the "Scotch marriage" entered into by Flora Campbell and Lord Hay. The father, Lachlan Campbell, not believing the girl's story of the marriage, drives her out of his house only to find his mistake after much suffering. Forgiveness and re-union follow and all ends happily. The charm of this play lies in its faithful representation of real life, not exaggerated, and for this reason it will afford particular pleasure to all who are familiar with the book. J. H. Stoddart, who so ably interprets Lachlan Campbell, announces this as his last season in "The Bonnie Briar Bash," which lends additional interest to the coming engagement. Reuben Fax, who has been identified with the leading comedy role. Archibald Mewhich lends additional interest to the coming chagagement. Reuben Fax, who has been identified with the leading comedy role, Archibald Mc-Kittrick, the village postman, continues with the company, as do many others who will be remembered from previous presentations. The scenery is painted from sketches of the exact localities, including views of the interior and exterior of Campbell's cottage and the glens of Drumtochty.

The English "Society for the Prevention of Consumption" prasided over by the Prince of Wales, was recently addressed by Sir William Broadbent, who stated that it was definitely known that every case of consumption began with a germ communicated from some other case. There is no such thing as inherited consumption. There may be local weakness which tends to consumption, but the germ has absolutely to be planted in that weak spot before consumption can ensue. This ought to comfort thousands of people who have "weak chests" or "weak lungs," They are not foreordained victims of this dread disease. All that's needed to bid absolute defiance to this deadly, scourge, is to be able to strengthen the weak lungs, and build up a strong body. The answer to this is found in Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It so purifies the blood and increases the blood supply, that disease is thrown off, and the weak organs are nourished into perfect health, which defies germs of every kind. People, given up by doctors, emaciated, bleeding at the lungs with obstinate, lingering coughs, are being cured every day by the use of "Golden Medical Discovery." He says : - " In the Spring of 1889 I was continually troubled with boils-one coming after another for about six months. I suffered terribly, and was in a very bad condition. In August I got a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and began to feel better after taking it.
