The customary hours of work are from 6 a. m. till 5.30 p. m., with a breakfast interval from 9 to 9.30 or 9.45, and a dinner-hour from 1 to 2. With the public-houses open as hitherto from 8 a. m. there is a temptation or the men engaged in hard, open-air work in an inclement climate to take a "refreshment" before breakfast, and this is not only unwholesome in itself, but is believed to conduce to excessive drinking at other times.

The present extent of the mischief is hard to estimate. The only evidence adduced as to breakfast-hour drinking related to a single publichouse in Glasgow which was seen to be entered by eighty-four and left by forty-seven customers within the space of nine minutes during the breakfast hour on a Monday morning. From Aberdeen, on the other hand, there was estimate made by a licensee that the loss of two hours trading in
