DEER HUNTING IN THE NORTH.

Ye Editor Tells of his Numerous and Varied Experiences While Searching for Game and Recreation in the Wilderness.

During the night succeeding the events recorded in our last, the snow fell to the depth of about four inches and as the weather had moderated a little the snow had stuck to the bushes, bending any small twig to the ground. The plan for the day was mapped out at the breakfast table and at an early hour all hands obeyed the order to proceed to their respective stations. The dogs were taken by the machine agent and smith to the south shore. The domine taking his old place at the Narrows, while the fox hunter and historian were sent to the upper end of the lake to go to the runways in that direction. Josiah was allowed to roam at will and started off in an opposite direction, on a still hunt. The fox hunter and historian were taken to the landing by the domine, and started for their positions. Only those who have travelled through thick underbrush and briars loaded with soft snow can form but a faint idea of that early morning tramp of a couple of miles. Before one quarter of the distance had been gone the garments of the hunters were saturated to the skin. They had not proceeded far before fresh signs of deer were discovered and they would fain have loitered in that locality, hoping to get a shot "on the sly." But their orders were to make all haste to their positions and they hastened on. Gentle reader just try for one moment to imagine the looks and feelings of the historian as he settled down to a two or three hours wait on the appointed hill top. When he arrived at his destination the perspiration was oozing from every pore, his clothing was wet from his toes to his headgear, even the extra pair of gloves he carried in his pocket was soaking. But...

NEWBORO.

MONDAY, Jan. 5.—James Foley, first engineer of the powerful tug Ranger, and Mr. Guss McKian, first assistant on the Str. Free Mason, are home for the winter. They report a foggy and tempestuous season. Mr. Foley entertains largely this winter on the corner of Main and Drummond St.

A dishonest jewelry pedlar, having been shown the error of his ways, recently returned $12 of his ill-gotten gains to one of his customers, and is now sowing tracts broadcast in the path of his honest neighbors. That's business; treat everybody as a rogue. Who pays for the tracts?

It would be advisable to all predatory individuals who are desirous of escaping justice to claim a citizenship. This is sufficient and the result will be a dismissal. The jurisprudence of the present day seems a thing of the past so far as our town is concerned, for in every case the prisoner is back before the constable.

Christmas this year was a dandy. A good time and giloes of whiskey. MONDAY, Jan. 5.—The majority of citizens have taken advantage of the sleighing by laying in a supply of wood for the coming year.

Mrs. S. K. Breeze who has been very ill for several weeks is slowly recovering. Mr. J. J. McNally has been engaged to teach in Bell's school house for the present year.

Bass fishing through the ice has been very successful for the past two or three weeks. Mr. R. L. MacDonald our school teacher has been on his way to Almonte to visit the doctor, who is dangerous.

OAK LEAF.

MONDAY, Dec. 5.—We are sorry to announce the serious illness of Mr. Samuel Green, may he speedily recover.

We are pleased to see our teacher G. H. Berry back again.

Master James Love had the misfortune to dislocate his shoulder while coasting at Lyndhurst on Saturday. It was replaced by Dr. Burritt of Lyndhurst.

Mr. Samuel Kendrick of Almonte is visiting his many friends here.

ADDISON.

MONDAY, Jan. 5.—Mr. A. Church of Mt. Pleasant is the next happy man. Its a boy.

Miss Lena Day of Daytown has been engaged to teach our school for the coming year.

Mr. Moore and wife of Hamilton are spending a few days in our village. They are the guest of Mr. Wellington Lewis, father of Mrs. Moore.

Mr. Ezra Wiltse of Marlborough paid our village a short visit one day last week. He is looking fine and says he is doing well.
