THE DEAD BLACKSMITH.

Thus at the flaming forge of life Our fortunes must be wrought, Thus on its sounding anvil shaped Each burning deed and thought.

The brave young blacksmith lieth cold The turf above his brow, Within the grave's dark, parrow fold In silent slumber now : A youth in years, ere manhood's fears Upon his heart had pressed, At close of day he passed away.

A father mourns his eldest son. A mother mourns her joy, The loving lad whose days are done, Their bonnie blacksmith boy; Their children mourn a brother dear A friend most fond and true, Their silent tears, for many years, Shall fall, dear one, for you.

No more the hammer in his hand, Upon the anvil rings, No more the burning iron band Its fiery shower flings; No more he'll mend, anneal Or weld the broken chain,

In realms of light he lives to-night, Beyond this world of pain. MICHAEL WHELAN.

In Last Tuesday was New Brunswick spread this head was outclassed by the one taken by Mr. Decatur of Portsmouth N. H. last year. The animal was killed and the autlers spread 66 inches. Mr. W. D. Winsor of Philadelphia killed a moose with a crown measuring 64. He also was taken on the Tobique last year, and Dr. Heber Bishop of this city killed an animal weighing 1000 pounds. The big bull shown in the New Brunswick exhibit was 9 ft. long, 5 ft. 7 inches in height, and weighed when killed about

They are now entering upon the breeding of the sea trout, and last autumn this gamey fish was successfully crossed with the salmon. The result is confidently expected to be a new game fish of the very best kind. A four foot salmon caught in the Restigouche was one of the wonders of the exhibit. It is mounted on a mahogany board, and illustrates the magnificence of the fish caught in those waters.
