IVANHOE.

CHAPTER XVII.

When Cedric the Saxon saw his son drop down senseless in the lists of Ashby, his first impulse was to order him into the custody and care of his attendants, but the words choked in his throat. He could not bring himself to acknowledge, in presence of such an assembly, the son whom he had renounced and disinherited. He erdered, however, Oswold to keep an eye upon him, and directed that officer, with two of his serfs, to convey Ivanhoe to Ashby as soon as the crowd had dispersed. Oswald, however, was anticipated in this good office. The crowd dispersed, indeed, but the knight was nowhere to be seen. It was in vain that Cedric's cupbearer looked around for his young master; he saw the bloody spot on which he had lately sunk down, but himself he saw no longer; it seem-GASFITTING AND PLUMBING | ed as if the fairies had conveyed He has also a full stock of Gas Pipe, him from the spot. Perhaps Os-Chandeliers, Pendants, Brackets, and wald (for the Saxons were very not suddenly cast his eye upon a person attired like a squire, in SOLE AGENT FOR ELLIS' BUR- whom he recognized the features

A lot of first class Cook Stoves, which will be sold at a bargain. was searching for him everywhere, and had neglected, in doing so, the concealment on which his own safety depended. Oswald deemed it his duty to secure Gurth, as a fugitive of whose fate his master was to judge. Renewing his inquiries concerning the fate of Ivanhoe, the only information which the cup-bearer could collect from the bystanders was, that the knight had been raised with care by certain well-attired grooms, and placed in a litter belonging to a lady among the spectators, which had immediately t ansported him out of the press. Oswald, on receiving this intelligence, resolved to return to his master for further instructions, carrying along with him Gurth, whom he considered in some sort

as a deserter from the services of Cedric.

The Saxon had been under very antee perfect satisfaction in every resintense and agonizing apprehensions concerning his son, for nature had asserted her rights, in spite of the patriotic stocism which labored to disown her. But no sooner was he informed that Ivanhoe was in careful, and probably in friendly hands, than the paternal anxiety which had been excited by the and CANADIANTWEEDS dubiety of his fate, gave way anew to the feelings of injured pride and resentment, at what they termed Wilfred's filial disobedience. "Let him wander his way," he said-"let those leech his wounds for placed in Attorneys hand for collection. whose sake he encountered them. He is fitter to do the juggling tricks of the Norman chivalry than to maintain the fame and honor of his English ancestry with the glaiv and brown-bill, the good old we ipons of his country." "If, to maintain the honor of anreasonable terms. Repairing executed in a satisfactory manner. in council and brave in execution to be boldest among the bold, and gentlest among the gentle, I know no voice, save his father's—"

"Be silent, Lady Rowenal on this subject only I hear you. Pre-pare yourself for the Prince's festival; we have been summoned thither with unwonted circumstance of honor and courtesy, such as the haughty Normans have rarely used to our race since the fatal day of Hastings. Thither will I go, were it only to shew these proud Normans how little the fate of a son, who could defeat their bravest, can affect a Saxon."

"Thither," said Rowena," do I NOT go, and I pray you to beware, MASK American Table Cutlery, dest what you mean for courage and obstinacy, should be accounted hard of heart."
