A Tribute to the Attractions of Goderten by 2 St. Thomas Journalist.

Goderich :-

Wally J. Wilkinson, of the St. Thomas Times, who spent a pleasant week here recently, thus discourses, in a readable letter, on some or the attractions of

The mornings were delightfully cool the appetite was keen, as my kind and hospitable entertainers know to their cost: the mind responded to the activity of the body, and all the world seemed to be as it might actually be were it sub-jected to a coldwater plunge and a vigorous application of a rough towel. True, the town lacks the bustle and life which characterize St. Thomas, but the antidyspeptic atmosphere and a sound night's sleep ahead to a certainty is compensal tion for any misery which may be oc-casioned by a dearth of stir and animation. The place possesses a most agree-able climate, as I have said, for during the hottest days of July and August, cooling breezes from Lake Huron fan it. to a most delicious temperature, that leaves the residenter nothing to wish for in that direction. The nights are always cool enough to enable one to sleep soundly beneath a fair quantity of bed-clothing. If I wished to revel in a season of doice far niente I know of no other place that I would prefer to Huron's capital, for none seems to possess its manifold attractions. Here may be enjoyed all the pleasures of the gun and rod in a most unusual degree, for while partridge, snipe, etc., are to be had in numbers scarcely three miles from town, the harbor affords a great variety of fishing, and every stream abounds with trout and furnishes ample scope for the angler to test his skill.

Goderich occupies, undoubtedly, one of the most charming spots that could be selected for a city, for, so far as landscape is concerned, nothing is absent that could please the eye. The place was laid out by the Canada Company, and its broad streets, 99 feet in width, are in striking contrast to the narrow avenues which St. Thomas boasts. The court house, with a very neat "breathing spot" surrounding it stands in the centre of what is singularly enough known as "the square," while the business houses are grouped about it in a circle, like chickens about the mother hen. But it is not in the streets alone that Goderich contrasts so favorably with St. Thomas. Its attractions are varied.
