CHAPTER XXVII.

"It always does me good. Some bored, and I don't know what's the matter with me, until I've thought it out; then I know that I'm just spoiling, running to seed, for want of fight; and I go and find the biggest him and have a good set-to, and I'm all the better for it, right as a trivet

"I wonder what a trivet is, and why it should be always right; and why a sand-boy should always be happy, grig should always be necessarily happy. There are some things which everybody talks about and nobody seems to know. Did you ever meet the 'welkin,' when it was 'ringing,'

"They are old English words, and we use them without knowing what they mean," he said. "I like to hear them, especially when some people use them." He glanced at in her eyes, as if she had forgotten his presence, and he bit his thick lip and stifled an oath. "We shall have to ride a bit faster." he said to her.

"Oh, no, not at all," she said, with faint surprise, for there had been a "You were so quiet." he said.
