

The Braes of Yarrow

An Historical Tale of the Sixteenth Century.

CHAPTER LVII.—JUSTICE.

After long storms and tempests overlorn, The sun at length his joyous face doth clear, So when as fortune all her spite hath shown, Some blisful hour her sunbeams appear, Else would afflicted wights oft-times despair.

Spens upon being fired upon in his boat after he had escaped from Tushielaw, had not been struck at all, but had fallen down in the hope that his pursuers might believe him dead and so cease the pursuit.

His anticipation was verified, and the tide carried his boat safely out to sea. Picked up by a fishing smack he had been carried safely to a large body of Scottish nobility to come and take the regency of Scotland, on the plea that the indecorous marriage of Queen Margaret with the already too powerful Douglas had destroyed her right to the regency, and the guardianship of the King.

Whilst Albany was making preparations for his journey to the north country, Spens hastened to England to accept the invitation of Surrey, certifying his innocence of the remotest complicity in the successful manoeuvre which had given the English army so much advantage at Flodden.

With this he hastened to Scotland, and on his way to the capital sought Kirsty Hyslop to learn whether his lady had fled. From her he learned in what period Mistress Spens had placed herself, and he had gone straight to the Lord Warden of the Middle Marches.—Spens displayed Surrey's mandate, and acquainted him of the coming of Albany, and obtained the assistance of a hundred troops, and the company of the Warden himself.

At Mount Beniger he again encountered Dame Hyslop who informed him of the exploit of Elliott and Lindsay, she having just sounded the bugle which was the signal for a party to escape from the chapel.

Spens well pleased to find his suspicions of the character of the attentions of Gilbert to Lady Margaret confirmed, hurried to help his friend in the rescue if there were need, whilst Kirsty hastened forward to Bowerhope Law to learn if anything had been heard from the tower.

Gilbert and Mary Douglas, Lindsay and the page Crawford, hotly pursued by all the men connected with the Priory, found the protection they needed, but had not expected to find, from Spens, and with him advanced to Tushielaw.

Andrew Howie's beacon attracted them, and the intelligence he gave quickened their pace forward.

During the high revel which was being held in the tower, it was an easy matter for Spens to lead his men within its walls by a secret passage, directions for finding which he had received from Kirsty. By this passage, which she had been made acquainted with by her son, as it was his chief means of communication with her, she had gained admission in time to prevent the insult proffered to Lady Spens; and so delayed proceedings till the arrival of succor.

After the flight of Douglas and his wife, the young Queen Dowager, to England, the innocence of Spens was publicly acknowledged by the Regency Albany and his escheated estates and the little captive Alice restored to him.

Gilbert's claim to the title and lands of Birnam was established beyond question by the documents and other proofs which Spens produced. In his wooing, he sped so well, that a few weeks after his accession to the throne there was a gay bridal in Edinburgh, of which the young lord of Birnam and bonnie Mary Douglas were the hero and heroine, and the Regent himself gave away the bride.

Lindsay became Captain again in the service of the Duke, and Crawford, who, from their interview in Peebles, had formed a strong attachment for him, followed him faithfully and well, displaying on more than one occasion a courage and discretion beyond his years, and which more than atoned his one mistake. He could not, however, be induced to return to the service of his former Mistress, although offered a post of honor by her husband.

Hornie, with a singular tenderness, nursed his mother through the illness which succeeded her wound, and they found a happy home and rest in the restored Tower of Hali-stane, where Andrew Howie grew fat and gray in the dignity of his office as henchman to the Knight.

The Princess of St. Margaret went to Rome, and died there the day after her arrival. Some said she had poisoned herself, but, perhaps to avoid scandal, the truth was never revealed.

So our trials are past, our friends are happy, and the green curtain falls. THE END.

A METEOR.—A night or two since, the moon was partially obscured by a light, fleecy cloud, a meteor ball, very luminous of a silvery hue, extremely brilliant, and to the eye somewhat larger in appearance than the moon itself. At first it appeared in the shape of a perfect globe, then gradually curled itself until it spread into one immense sheet of liquid fire, and formed letters reading nearly as follows:— "If your feet are troubled with corns, bunions, callosities, &c., get immediately to the nearest drug store and get a box of Brigg's Curative. It will effect a certain cure, in incredible short time. For sale by E. Harvey & Co., druggists, and country merchants generally. C. H. Wright & Co., Hamilton, Ont., general agents for British Possessions.

BRAY'S WAFERS, (The great public remedy), have now been in use over twenty years, hence it cannot be said that they are on trial. They have been thoroughly tried, and pronounced (on the authority of those whose lives and health they have preserved) to be a cure, harmless and eminently salutary preparation, and if taken in season will invariably cure colds, coughs, sore throat, and all bronchial affections. One fair trial will convince the most skeptical. Sold by all medicine dealers, at 25 cents per box.
