The Strange Metamorphosis.

They entered the church, and Paul was sent down to the extreme end of e pew next to the one reserved for the doctor and his family. Dulcie was atting there already on the other side of the partition, but she gave no sign of her having noticed his arrival, being apparently absorbed in studying he rose window over the altar. He sat down in his corner with a sense of rest and almost comport, though the seat was not a cushioned one. He had the inoffensive Kiffin for a neighbor, his chief tormentors were far away from him in one of the back pews, and here at least, he thought, no harm could come to him. He could allow himself safely to do what I am afraid he generally did do under the circumstances—snatch a few intermit-tent but sweet periods of dreamless

But, while the service was proceeding Mr. Bultitude was suddenly hor-rified to observe that a young lady, who occupied a pew at right-angles to and touching that in which he sat, was deliberately making furtive signals to him in a most unmistakable manner.

She was a decidedly pretty girl of about fifteen, with merry and daring blue eyes and curling golden hair, and was accompanied by two small brothers (who shared the same book and dealt each other stealthy and vicious kicks throughout the service), and by her father, a stout, short-sighted old gentleman in gold spectacles, who was perpetually making the wrong responses in a loud and confident tone.

To be signaled to in a marked manby a strange young lady of great personal attractions might be a coveted distinction to other schoolboys, but

"I suppose that's 'Connie Davenant." he thought, shocked beyond measure as she caught his eye and coughed demurely for about the fourth time.
"A very forward young person! I think somebody ought to speak seriously to her father."

Good gracious! she's writing something on the fly-leaf of her prayer-book," he said to himself presently. "I hope she's not going to send it to me. I won't take it. She ought to be ashamed of herself!"

Miss Davenant was indeed busily engaged in penciling something on a blank piece of paper; and, having fin-ished, she deftly folded into a cocked hat, wrote a few words on the outside and placed it between the leaves of her book.

Then, as the congregation rose for the Psalms, she gave a meaning glance at the blushing and scandalized Mr. Bultitude, and by dexterous management of her prayer book, shot the little cocked hat, as if unconsciously, into the next pew.

By a very unfortunate miscalculaproper object, and, clearing the partition, fluttered deliberately down on the floor by Dulcie's feet. Paul saw this with alarm; he knew that at all hazards he must get that miserable note into his own possesion and destroy it. It might have name somewhere about it; it might seriously compromise him.

So he took advantage of the noise the congregation made in repeating a verse aloud (it was not a high church) to whisper to Dulcie: "Little Miss Grimstone, excuse me, but there's a —a note in the pew down by your feet. I believe it is intended for me." Durcie had seen the whole affair, and had not been a little puzzled by it, a clandestine correspondence being a new thing in her short experience; but she understood in this golden-haired girl, her elder by several years, she saw her rival, for whom Dick had so basely abandoned her yesterday, and she was old enough to feel the slight and the sweetness of revenge. So she held her head rather higher than usual, with her firm little chin projecting willfully; and waited for the next verse but one before retorting, "Little Master Bultitude, I know it

"Could you—can you manage to reach it?" whispered Paul, entreat-ingly. "Yes," said Dulcie, "I could." "Then will you-when they down?"

"No," said Dulcie, firmly, "I shan't." The other girl, she noticed with satisfaction, had become aware of the situation, and was evidently uneasy. She looked as imploringly as she dared at remorseless little Dulcie, as if appealing to her not to get her into trouble; but Dulcie bent her eyes obstinately on her book and would not see her.

Mr. Bultitude began now to be seriously alarmed. The fatal paper must be seen by someone in the doctor's pew as soon as the congregation sat down again; and, if it reached the doctor's hands, it was impossible to say what misconstruction he might put upon it. or what terrible consequences might follow.

He was innocent, perfectly innocent; but though the consciousness of innocence is frequently a great consola-tion, he felt that unless he could imoue the doctor with it as well it would not save him from a flogging.

So he made one more desperate attempt to soften Dulcie's resolution: "Don't be a naughty little girl," he said, very injudiciously for his purpose; "I tell you I must have it. You'll get me into a terrible mess if you're not careful!" not careful!

But although Dulcie had been extremely well brought up, I regret to say that the only answer she chose to make to this appeal was that slight contortion of the features with which contortion of the features with which a pretty girl is euphemized as a "moue," and with a plain one is called "making a face." When he saw it he knew that all hope of changing her purpose must now be abandoned.

Then they all sat down, and, as Paul had foreseen there the white cocked had foreseen, there the white cocked hat lay on the dark pew carpet, hideously distinct, with billet doux in every fold of it!

It could only be a question of time

now. The curate was reading the first lesson for the day, but Mr. Bultitude heard not, a verse of it. He was waiting with bated breath for the blow to fall.

It fell at last. Dulcie, either with the malevolent idea of hastening the crisis, or (which I prefer to believe for my own part) finding that her ex-lover's visible torments were too much for her desire of vengeance, was softly moving a heavy cassock toward the guilty note. The movement caught her mother's eye, and in an instant the compromising paper was in her watchful hands.
She read it with incredulous horror, and handed it at once to the doctor. The golden-haired one saw it all without betraying herself by any outward confusion. She had probably had some experience in such matters, and felt tolerably certain of being able, at the worst, to manage the old gentleman in the gold spectacles. But she took at early opportunity of se-cretly conveying her contempt for the traitress Dulcie, who continued to meet her angry glance with the blandest unconsciousness.

Dr. Grimstone examined the cocked hat through his double eyeglesses, with a heavy thunder-cloud gathering on his brows. When he had mastered it thoroughly, he bent forward and glared indignants past his wife and daughter for at least half a minute into the new where Mr. Bultitude was to the pew where Mr. Bultitude was cowering, until he felt that he was coming all to pieces under the piercing gaze.

The service passed all too quickly after that. Paul sat down and stood up almost unconsciously with the rest; but for the first time in his life he could have wished the sermon many times longer.

The horror of his position quite petrified him. After all his prudent resolutions to keep out of mischief and to win the regard and confidence of his jailer by his good conduct, like the innocent convict in a melodrama, this came as nothing less than a catastrophe. He walked home in a truly dismal state of limp terror. Fortunately for him none of the others seemed to have noticed his misfortune, and Jolland made no further advances. But even the weather tended to increase his depression, for it was a bleak and cheerless day, with a bitter and searching wind sweeping the gritty roads where yesterday's rain was turned into black ice in the ruts, and the sun shone with a dull coppery glitter that had no warmth or geniality about it.

The nearer they came to Crichton House the more abjectly miserable became Mr. Bultitude's state of mind. It his knees positively clapped together when the doctor, who had driven home, met them in the hall, and said in a grave voice, "Bultitude, when you have taken off your coat I want you in the study."

He was as long about taking off his coat as he dared, but at last he went trembling into the study, which he found empty. He remembered the room well, with its ebory-framed eachings on the walls, bookcases and blue china over the draped mantelpiece, even to a large case of elaborately carved Indian chessmen in bullock-cants and palanquins, on horses and elephants, which stood in the window recess. It was the very room to which he had been shown when he first called about sending his son to the school. He had little thought then that the time would come when he would attend there for the purpose of being flogged; few things would have seemed less probable. Yet here he was. But his train of thought was abruptbroken by the entrance of the doctor. He marched solemnly in, holding out the offending missive. "Look here, sir!" he said, shaking it angrily be-fore Paul's eyes. "Look here! what do you mean by receiving a flippant communication like this in a sacred edi-What do you mean by it?" "I-I didn't receive it," said Paul, at his wit's end. "Don't prevaricate with me, sir; you know well enough it was intended for you. Have the goodness to read it now, and tell me what you have to say for yourself!" (To be Continued.)

No Lady Would Do Such a Thing.

No lady would take her watch when out of order, to the first person who dis-played the sign "Watches Regulated and Repaired." But she would carefully enquire for a man whose acknowledged skill entitled him to take in charge the delicate mechanism.

How much more careful should a woman be, when she herself is disorderded, not to entrust the delicate and complex mechanism of her being to the first man or woman who displays the sign "Medical Advice Given." No sign is to be trusted which says "Medical Advice Given" and stops there. Medical advice can be given only by a physician. An accredited physician will put his title with his name. Suppose a sign his title with his name. Suppose a sign reads, "Medical Advice Given by a Man." What woman would not instantly say, "The fact of being a man doesn't qualify him to give medical advice. He must be a physician to do that." But suppose the sign reads: "Medical Advice Given by a Woman." Is not the fact just as patent that being a woman does not qualify her to give medical advice. The woman must be a physician to do that. Medical advice given by an unskilled woman is just as dangerous as if given by an unskilled

National Organization Amends Its Constitution.

Lady Physicians for Public Institutions-Comforts for the Volunteers,

Hamilton, Oct. 26.—The National Council of Women passed a series of resolutions amending the constitution. The first provided that any person whose name is accepted by the executive committee may be made a life member of the National Council on payment of a fee of $25. In addition to this the council decided that it should be understood that any local council, nationally organized society or individual subscribers sending in over and above the fees might, with it, send the name of a person for life membership, with the approval of the executive committee.

Mrs. Lamonth, Ottawa, and Mrs. Yarker, London, moved a resolution, which was carried without discussion, providing that any person whose name is accepted by the executive committee may become a life member of a local council on payment of a fee of

The third and last amendment proposed was to the effect that the meetings of the National Council should be held biennially instead of annually.

The motion was lost.

The following resolution That the National Council of Women recommends the addition of women physicians to the medical staff of hospiltals, asylums for the instane, and other institutions where women and children are provided for.

It was agreed that copies of the resolution should be sent to the provincial governments.

The following resolution caused some discussion, but was carried unanimously: That the members of the National Council of Women of Canada be invited to consider whether a larger measure of freedom and beisure can be given to storekeepers and their ployes on Saturday by customers shopping on Friday, or, when this is impossible, on Saturday morning, and that local councils be asked to consider how the weekly half-holiday for employes in stores and other places of business can be promoted.

The delegates decided to meet next year in Victoria. The Victorian local council will fix the date. Lady Aberdeen announced that Mrs. Sanford had subscribed $100 toward the fund of the standing committee for arranging for the comfort and convenience of the Canadian contingent

BOLD BURGLARS IN A BREWERY

Assault and Rob the Watchman and Endeavor to Rifle the Safe.

Brantford, Oct. 26.-The brewery of the Bixel Brewing and Malting Com-pany, corner Alfred and South streets, was entered by burgiars Tuesday night. At about 10 o'clock, when Alexander Cunningham, the night watch, was going his rounds and was leaving the house, he was met at the door by a man who grafished him Seeing the one man, Cunningham struck out at him, when two other men ap-One of them struck him on the head with a hammer. This stunned Cunningham, and the three burglars proceeded to bind him with a clothesline, winding It all around him. They then took all his money, between $16 and $17, valuables and keys on his person, and then carried him to a lane between the brewery and the office, where they held a consultation, after which they took him to a room in the brewery, and one man, with door partly closed, watched him, while the others proceeded to unlook the office door. After getting into the office they proceeded to blow the safe.

During this time Cumningham was struggling in the dark to free himself. After an hour, he succeeded in getting one hand free, and, getting out his knife, cut the clothesline that he was tied with, and escaped out the back way unobserved. Going for the nearest telephone he called the police. Three policemen arrived while the men were alt work in the building, but for some unaccountable reason the three burglars were allowed to escape. They made two efforts to blow the safe door open, but only succeeded in getting it open an inch or two. They secured no valuables excepting what they took from Cunningham. A man named Smith, living across the road from the brewery, heard the noise, and went over to see what it was, when one of the burglars drew a revolver at him and he left. The police are working the

ONTARIO SUNDAY SCHOOL CON-

VENTION. Galt, Oct. 26 .- The thirty-fourth annual convention of the Provincial Sabbath School Association of Ontario opened proceedings in the Central Presbyterian Church on Tuesday. About 500 delegates from all parts of Ontario are in attendance. The executive committee passed a resolution recommending the appointment of two permanent secretaries—one to devote his time to visiting all the Sabbath schools in Ontario, and the other to remain in the head office is Toronto. The general secretary reported that under existing conditions he found it utterly impossible to break new ground, and at the same time give the necessary attention to existing organizations. He suggested a superintendents' union for cities. The afternoon session was taken largely by routine business. The night's session closed with a song service and addresses of welcome

BEFORE THE EYES OF HIS MOTHER

Fred Sweetman Was Crushed to Death Near Essex-Jane McDonald's Death.

Windsor, Oct. 26 .- A 12-year-old boy named Fred Sweetman met a horrible death near Essex yesterday morning. The lad was riding on a wagon loaded with gravel, in company with a number of companions, and a playful push from one of them threw him under the vehicle, the heavy wheels of which passed over his abdomen, crushing out his life. His mother was riding in a buggy only a few yards behind, and witnessed the accident Terror-stricken, she jumped from the buggy ran to she jumped from the buggy, ran to where her boy lay, and clasped him in her arms. He tried to speak to her, but died before he could utter the words. Only about five years ago another boy in the same family was killed in a similar way.

Amherstburg, Ont., Oct. 26.-The verdict of the jury in the coroner's inquest, held here, re the death of Mrs. Jane McDowell, who was killed in the township of Anderdon by being dragged after a horse and buggy, criminal neglect of John Welsh, who was the driver of the rig. It appears the victim and a Mrs. Dick Dunn went for a drive with Welsh, and all got drunk. Welsh became abusive, and Dunn jumped out of the buggy. It is supposed Mrs. McDowell attempted to jump, and caught her foot in the side bar of the buggy, and her body was dragged for half a mile. The deceased was a widow, without children, and about forty years old.
