

Manchester Courier. The chief strength of this powerful novel lies in its finely drawn characters. The writer undoubtedly possesses high literary gifts.

Onlooker.
(In a page review.) One of those rare stories of compelling interest.

Pall Mall Gazette. The book is uncommonly interesting. The author has a decided gift for writing.

Daily Telegraph. Shows a distinct capacity for telling a good story, and a command of good incident.

Scotsman. The book is marvellously clever and unconventional.

Standard. Shows abundant proof that Mrs. Holt can write, and has a true and vivid sense of the dramatic.

Yorkshire Observer. Mrs. Holt writes well and gracefully, with a good deal of distinction.

Christian World. Mrs. Holt has sketched her characters with infinite skill, and the reality with which she has endowed her fiction makes it the more impressive.

Indian Daily News. This is a remarkable book; the best novel of the year and apparently a first work.
