After the eldest daughter had some what quieted down, the police to-night secured the clearer account of the tragedy. Why the man remained in the kitchen after shooting the younger sister, while the other sister was trying to escape by way of the back yard and how the elder sister escaped so lightly, are things that are puzzling the police.

Neighborhood in Terror.

The mother is prostrated. She was told of the tragedy to-night. The peo-ple in the district are panic-stricken. That a desperado could enter a home in broad daylight, commit murder, then make his escape, is almost beyond be-lief. The fact that he is still at large keeps the nervous in a state of terror.

There is a general demand that the police make a roundup of the tramps who infest the city and hang out in the various lodging houses. The plan on which they work is to secure the records from the lodging houses, calling for meals and a bed. These are then presented to citizens who are well known for their charity, for signature, and the money is collected afterwards by the keepers of the lodging houses. The tramps have become so cheeky that many people have been afraid to sign the tickets they present.

A Prominent Family.

The Kinrade family has been identified with the city for several decades. There is a street and a survey bearing the name. Both girls were musical.
