Forgiving one Another.—A person in high life once went to Sir Earldley Wilmot, late lord chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas, under the impression of great wrath and indignation at a real injury which he had received from high in the political world, and which he was meditating how to resent in the most effectual manner. After relating the particulars, he asked Sir Earldley if he did not think it would be manly to resent it? "Yes," said the ornament of the bench, "it will be manly to resent it, but it will be godlike to forgive it." [The gentleman declared that this had such an instantaneous effect upon him, that he came away quite a different man and in a totally different temper from that in which he went.]

The late Hearer.—A minister whom I well knew, observing that some of his people made a practice of coming in very late, and after a considerable part of the sermon was gone through, was determined that they should feel the force of a public reproof. One day, therefore, as they entered the place of worship at their usual late period, the minister, addressing his congregation, said, "But, my hearers, it is time to conclude, for here are our friends just come to fetch us home."
