

It is probably best to select two or three persons who have the ability to know what in the different books would be of interest to other persons, and who have also the time and inclination to read all the books. The books may be found in public, Sunday-school or private libraries, or may be purchased by some special fund for that purpose. Suppose the Intermediate superintendent decides that no boy or girl should be promoted from the Intermediate Department without having read at least three missionary biographies and two books of general missionary reading. By displaying all five books, and by having reviews given before all the classes by five bright pupils, the books will be introduced. From Sunday to Sunday they should be checked up and reported. Add to this a good deal of enthusiasm, and the books will be read.
