

THE FARM.

The Essentials for Winter Dairying.

"I find that winter dairying is being more generally adopted every season, and in the fall of the year some farmers who have never tried it before are making preparations for the work. Last winter a great many dairymen went into winter dairying on a small scale, and I have yet to hear of one who found the work disappointing." says an exchange. "Despite this annual use of the ranks, there are still comparatively few engaged in this work, either through ignorance or a fear to attempt anything new.

"I have found that more depends upon the kind of cow one has for winter dairying, than in summer dairying, and the animals destined for this work cannot be selected so carefully. If you intend to ship milk to the city, a good milk-producing cow above all else should be tried. The cows should calve sometime in August, and the calves can be raised for the winter market with considerable profit. In August the green grass is generally dried up pretty well, and as the cows must have food at this time we must depend upon the green corn. Good fodder corn planted so as to be ready for eating in August and September makes the best sort of food for the mother cow. The corn will make the milk flow freely, and this is the greatest sign of success in the undertaking. If the cows do not have green, succulent food at this time they will dry up and never pay much for winter dairying. The silo should be filled with good corn and grass so that the silage can be fed out as soon as frost has set in and to the green corn. The ensilage should be in sufficient quantity to keep the cows in excellent condition until green grass comes again in the following spring.

"The rations of the cows engaged in winter dairying should be daily about twenty-five to thirty pounds of ensilage, and two and a half pounds of coarse middlings morning and night, and two or three pounds of clover hay at noon. This ration with plenty of fresh water and salt, will keep the cows in splendid condition, and will yield a good quantity of rich milk and cream through the whole winter. One can grow and raise on hand to feed to the cows, they will help to make a diet more varied, and the cows will produce the change. But generally the over ration is satisfactory, and it is not a fault one to prepare. The middlings can be bought at the season of the year at the cheapest, and in a large quantity any reduction can thus be obtained. The silage for the cows to drink should average a temperature of about fifty-four degrees. The cold days it must be warmed to this temperature, and the milk will thicken, and I check the flow of milk.

The cows should be put into the barn this just as soon as cool weather is here, and this shelter to enable them to keep their best. The barn and yard should be well cleaned, and the weather gets colder the cracks in the barn and stable should be closed up, and draughts kept out just as much as you intended to sleep in the winter yourself. Most of the farmers and blue are too windy for any cow to live through the winter with any degree of comfort. A free use of tarred paper all over the building will make a wonderful improvement. Then if the stable is an old-fashioned one, built right on the ground, fill the sides a foot or more with sawdust, keep the wind from sweeping up under boards. The warmth and comfortable of the stable will make quite a difference in the yield of milk during the cold winter."

LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

LIEUT.-COL. SIR WALTER WILKIN IS THE CHIEF MAGISTRATE.

Some Account of His Position and Power.—The Number of His Offices.—Method of Electing the Mayor.—List of Mayors of English Cities.—The Queen Must Obtain Permission from the Lord Mayor to Pass Through the City.

The announcement that a new Lord Mayor of London had been elected in the person of Lieut.-Col. Sir Walter Wilkin was made the other day, and although the new occupant of the ancient office is no more notable than the great majority of his predecessors, nor the circumstances attending his election any more remarkable or significant than usual, some account of his position and power will be of interest, especially at a time when municipal affairs in this part of the Empire are beginning to receive more than ordinary attention. The idea is prevalent that the Lord Mayor exercises a jurisdiction over the whole of the English capital, whereas the fact is that it extends merely within the limits of the small inner city, which had in 1891 a population of only 37,000. The dignity and importance of his office must not, however, be measured by the sphere of his influence as a municipal official for an examination of the ancient records shows that by virtue of certain of them he is an admiral of the port of London.

A GENERAL OF MILITIA.

Chief Butler to the Crown, a Conservator of the Thames, a judge in civil and criminal cases, a Master of the City Hunt (which, by-the-by, no longer exists), a Controller of Weights and Measures, a Dictator of the Public Markets, and a member of the Queen's Privy Council. Further, that he has his budget, his civil list, his official residence, his own carriage in armour, his chaplain, his police, his goal, his gentlemen-in-waiting, his purse-bearer, his sword-bearer, his marshal, and, last, but not least, his own hansom.

It is not all. Writers who have defined his powers say that were it to please him to decree that no one should pass the Bank of England without doffing his hat, or enter the Stock Exchange save in knee-breeches, no power in the land would have the right to gainsay his mandate. Regarding the method of electing the Lord Mayor it should be noted that it differs materially from that followed in electing municipal heads on this side of the sea. The affairs of the municipal corporations remain practically in the hands of the close and self-perpetuating guilds, the members of which elect the aldermen for life, and the common councillors for a term of one year. They, with the Lord Mayor, form the great court, the Corporation of the City.

CHOSEN ANNUALLY.

from the ranks of the aldermen by the aldermen themselves, and notwithstanding the precedent set at the time of Dick Whittington, re-election is an honour rarely bestowed. The absence of "bosses" and "ward-healers" is a notable characteristic of English municipal politics, and there is reason to envy the inhabitants of the English cities in the fact that citizens of social and commercial eminence are not so high as here, reluctant to have anything to do with municipal affairs. Thus the Duke of Sutherland has just accepted the office of Mayor of the town of Loughborough, and the Earl of Warwick is at the present moment Mayor of the ancient city of Warwick. The Marquis of Bute, the "Lothbar" of Lord Beaconsfield's novel of that name, has been officiating as Mayor of Cardiff, and has been succeeded by Lord Windsor; while Lord Londesborough and Lord Milton are among the mayor-elect who will enter upon the duties of their office on the 9th of November next. Lord Rosebery and the Duke of Norfolk, the latter the premier peer of the United Kingdom, have not thought it beneath their dignity to fill the chair of "President of the County Council of London, the President of that body being the real Lord Mayor of 699 square miles out of the 700 that constitute the area of the British metropolis, and consequently really the only one.

QUALIFIED TO SUE.

in the name of the national capital. In fairness it should be noted that the dignity of the position of a Mayor or Lord Mayor in the Old Land is relatively much greater than that of a new world Mayor, but the former are by no means sinecures. As a matter of fact, the Mayor's privileges are carefully observed, although there are certain formalities that are still adhered to that, perhaps, tend to make the Lord Mayor of London ridiculous rather than dignified. For instance, the Queen herself must obtain his permission whenever she desires to pass through the city, and whenever there is a birth, a marriage, or a death in the reigning family, the occurrence is solemnly communicated by a Secretary of State in the Queen's name to the Lord Mayor, with the request that he shall make it known to the citizens. But he has many really important and difficult duties to perform, and exercises considerable influence in the government of the municipality.

SOME DEADLY TRIFLES.

INSIGNIFICANT ACCIDENTS THAT HAVE FATAL CONSEQUENCES.

Men Who Died from the Prick of a Needle.—A Man Whose Hand Came by Cutting His Finger with a Pin.—The Protean Forces in Which Death Comes to the Human Race.

The records of every accident insurance company afford innumerable instances of the insecurity of our tenure of life, and furnish many illustrations of the ease with which a man can be killed. Not a day passes but that thousands of seamstresses and tailors prick their fingers with their needles, and nothing is thought of the accident, if it can be called such, but at least a dozen deaths are recorded from this cause alone during the last ten years. A few months ago a man in Massachusetts cut his finger with the sharp edge of a sheet of paper while folding a letter; the wound, slight as it was, was suppurated, blood-poisoning set in, and he died a few days later. A New York shoemaker, while drawing a waxed end tight, gashed his thumb with the thread, and died in ten days. A man in Philadelphia died a few years ago from paring a corn too closely, and another in Boston from a small cut accidentally inflicted while cutting his thumb nail. A woman of Baltimore, while biting her finger-nail, bit into the quick, and died in two weeks, while a stone bruise, that common affliction of barefooted youth, proved fatal to a boy of New Jersey. A few months ago a farmer in Ohio died from being kicked by a hog. He, with another man, having tied the beast, was placing it in a wagon, when it suddenly gave a violent kick, struck him in the abdomen with its hind feet, and caused an injury which he died in a few days. Still stranger was the case of a gentleman in New York who died a couple of years ago from the effects of a mote in his eye. It gave him much pain, but he would not neglect his business to go to an oculist, and the day after the mote had effected a lodgment the eye was so greatly swollen that the oculist could do nothing save make efforts to reduce the inflammation. Attempts in this direction were, however, in vain; the swelling continued, and spread over one side of his face, crystals set in, and in a week the man was dead. The oculist, in the taking of a gentleman in London in 1891, was approaching middle age, and had a number of gray hairs rather conspicuously displayed above his forehead. His youthful fiancée objected to them, and to please her, he permitted her to pull them out. The next day he noticed a slight inflammation and irritation of the skin where the hairs had been removed, but thought little of it. A day later the inflammation had developed to an alarming extent, and he sent for a physician. In spite of all that could be done to save him, he died in a week.

DEATH FROM A KISS.

Instances of mothers dying of diphtheria after kissing their children of the disease are numerous, but are in no way remarkable, as the communication of the virus in such a case is easily understood. That a lover should die from kissing his sweetheart who was afflicted with the disease is not, however, so common. Such a case is recorded as having occurred in Massachusetts some years ago. The young woman had in her familiar phrase known as a fever blister, but the young fellow who was unfortunate enough to kiss her regard did not propose to allow a little thing like that to interfere with his happiness, so, during the course of his visit, made at the time when the fever blister was in its glory, he kissed her, and some time with none at all, there is some confirmation in the fact that numerous instances are known of men hanging on to existence with a tenacity that defies the most serious injuries. Nature seems to strike a medium, and to preserve the lives of men in spite of the most ghastly wounds and mutilations. Men have lived for years with both arms and both legs gone, and four great suppurating sores at the places where the amputations had been made. They have survived bullet holes through their heads and knife wounds in their hearts; they have lived on with one lung gone and the other giving very little work; they have continued to live even with some degree of comfort with holes in their stomachs, through which the processes of digestion could be observed; they have had their skulls partly cut away, their ribs taken out, their internal membranes cut to pieces, and resuscitated, their whole bodily economy deranged in such a way that life would seem to be an impossibility. Men have survived broken arms, legs and backs; men have outlived broken necks; men have lived on with one kidney and one testicle, and in such a state of degeneration and decay that they ought to have been dead years before they actually died. They have come out of railroad wrecks with almost every important bone in the body broken, and in a few months have gone back to work. They have survived falls where escape from instant death seemed impossible. In Denver a few years ago a boy leaped out of a hotel window, fell 83 feet 4 inches, came down a brick pavement on his head and shoulders, and in three weeks was back at his old place, with not a bone broken and only a few bruises as reminders of the terrible incident. When such an accident as this is contrasted with the way in which a man may be killed by trifling accidents, it tends to make converts to the doctrine of fatalism and to inspire abounding faith in the old-time axiom that "A man's immortal till his time has come."

AWFUL TORTURES AT SEA.

A SAILOR MADE TO WEAR A CROSS OF CAPSTAN BARS.

The Frightful Tortures Suffered by Sea-men—Deaths of Seamen on a Floating Hell—Men Turned Adrift in a South American Port.

The sailors on the American ship Benjamin Sewall, which came so near going to the bottom on the way to San Francisco, told a vivid story about the brutal treatment of seamen who were forced to leave the vessel at Tame, Chile. When the ship got to that port in distress five sailors were told by the officers to leave. According to the statements of the seamen, the men who were thus discharged intended to have First Mate Smith and Second Mate Ostend arrested for cruelty on the high seas, but could not do it because there was no American Consul at Tame.

The men turned adrift in Chile were Seaman West, Smith, Rosser, Bismarck and John Graber. Rosser kept a log of the trip to show when the acts of brutality complained of were committed. This log was written at nights in the forecabin, and all the seamen testify the truth of its statements. Hardly a day passed that some seaman was not struck or punished in some peculiar and ingenious fashion. Rosser sent the log to San Francisco by one of the seamen with instructions to turn it over to the authorities, but this was not done.

On March 10, 10 days out of port, Mate Smith struck Frank Smith in the face four times and then made him sit in the lee scupper four hours scraping pain.

A seaman called Bob by his mates, resisted the second mate, who was going to beat him. The two mates beat Bob senseless, and after he had returned to consciousness on his back, and made him work for 12 hours scraping and washing paint. There were two wounds in his head, from which blood flowed. The next day and the day following his punishment continued. Bob was compelled to eat his food in the poop, and was not allowed to go forward. Some of the sailors saw him, and his face was swollen and his eyes were bloody. He was kept on deck all night carrying his cross of capstan bars. The mate made him beat a tune on a tin can with handspikes. On the second day of torture the crew were compelled to lower Bob over the side to look a mousing on the foremast. The ship kept dipping him in the water, but he was kept there half an hour. The next day (Sunday) the crew was still kept on the seaman's back. Another sailor who had come in for a good share of the beatings, John Graber, was sent to the poop to read the Bible to Bob, while the mates stood by and laughed. Graber was also compelled to go for the man with the cross on his back.

According to the seaman's log, from that time on Bob was given only about three hours' sleep a day. On March 12 Bob was sent aloft and made to cry, "See, sir, all for his back!" for half an hour. On the 13th the cross of capstan bars was removed by the captain's order.

On March 30th, while Frank Smith was at the wheel, he let the ship be taken back. Mate Smith got out of the cabin in his face, and then compelled him to put up tackle in the main lower rigging, and to hoist and lower himself for half an hour. All the time Smith was

CRYING FOR MERCY.

Mate Smith got after his old friend Bob again on April 1, and the log relates that the mate attacked him while sending down the mizzen royal yard, and, on getting him out in the main mast, beat him over the back with a light of rope until his back was black and blue, and covered with welts.

On April 25 the second mate, Ostend, kicked Frank Smith in the face and poked him in the eyes with rope to wipe the tears away. Two days later a shed like a dog kennel was erected on the forward house for Smith to sleep in.

The log relates that on April 27 Mate Smith getting out of patience with Bob because he did not hear one of his commands, compelled him to take off his trousers on deck. The mate took the end of a broom handle, roughened with the carpenter's rasp, dipped it in hot tar and rubbed it over the sailor's legs until he howled with pain.

On May 5 Mate Smith struck Seaman Graber because he wore his coat while pulling in the main brace.

"After the ship was put on the other tack," says the log, "the chief mate lashed Graber's coat to his body and marlin-hitched his coat sleeves from the shoulders to the wrists so tight that it stopped the circulation of the blood in his arms. He did likewise with his trousers from the thighs to the ankles. Then he took a board one foot by two feet and wrote with chalk the words thereon: 'I am not cold; I am not sleepy; Tougey, tougey.' This was lashed to Graber's back. He was sent to the wheel, so the captain could see him, and was kept there until four bells."

The sailors were at times compelled to march up and two about the deck, carrying a flag and bucket.

A DOCK BUCKER

for a drum—this by way of humiliation. When three of the crew fell ill, the mate compelled them to fasten tackle on each side of the main lower rigging and hoist themselves five feet above the deck. Rosser was too weak to do it and was sent to the poop for punishment. He fell in a fit and Smith threw two buckets of cold water over him and had him dragged back to the forecabin. The mate took to carrying a pistol.

This ship is a floating hell, in the language of the log. "What surprises all of us is that the Captain allows the mates to carry on this way. The captain bar that Seaman Bob of the starboard watch carried for 22 days, off an ear, weighed about 12 pounds. It was worse than a ball and chain, and was never taken off his chest when he was sent aloft, which was seldom."

D. T. Lochead, M. A., assistant master of English and modern languages at the Collegiate Institute, Hamilton, has been appointed head master of Caledonia High School.

A black serpent six feet nine inches in length was killed in the Otomabe river, at Rosa's bridge, the other day. It was perfectly scaleless and not unlike a common black snake except in size.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

Dr. G. C. Osmond, Lowell, Mass.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quick nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

Dr. J. F. Kitchell, Conway, Ark.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. Anson, M. D., 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

A YOUNG GIRL'S TRIALS.

Her Parents Had Almost Given Up Hope of Her Recovery.

Pale and Emaciated, Subject to Severe Headaches, She Was Thought to Be Going into a Decline—Now the Picture of Health and Beauty.

From the Richmond, N. B., Review.

There are very few people, especially among the agriculturists of Kent County, N. B., who do not know Mr. H. H. Warman, the popular agent for agricultural machinery, of Molen River. A Review representative was in conversation with Mr. Warman recently, when the subject of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills was incidentally touched upon. Mr. Warman said he was a staunch believer in their curative properties, and to justify his opinion he related the cure of his sister, Miss Jessie Warman, aged 15, whom he said had been almost wrested from the grave by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Miss Warman had been suffering for nearly a year with troubles incident to girlhood. She suffered

HORRIBLE TRAGEDY.

A Farm Laborer Attempts to Murder a Farmer's Daughter Near Benfield, Ont.

—He Then Commits Suicide by Cutting His Throat From Ear to Ear.

A despatch from London, Ont., says:—Intelligence has been received here of a tragedy which happened near Denfield, about 17 miles from this city, between 8 and 10 o'clock on Monday night. As far as can be learned John Layng, a farm laborer, met Miss Mabel T. Robson, the daughter of Mr. W. B. Robson, a well-to-do farmer, at Siddalville, on the highway. There he attempted to murder Miss Robson with a razor, and cut her in the back of the head in a terrible manner. He then deliberately cut his throat from ear to ear, dying almost at once.

According to another account, Layng procured a horse and rig from Munro's livery stable, Ailsa Craig, early in the evening, and drove to the home of Miss Robson. When Layng arrived Miss Robson was engaged milking the cows on the brow of a hill on the roadside. Layng approached her and requested her to ride away with him and get married. This she promptly refused to do. Layng then endeavored to force her into the rig, and, falling in this, he threw her to the ground, knocked her a razor he cut and slashed her. Fortunately, Miss Robson is a strong girl, and no vital spot was struck by the weapon. Leaving her for dead, Layng went to the house of his parents, about twenty rods away, bade the family good-by, and going out across his face and neck until he was almost expired in a few minutes. Miss Robson managed to walk to her home where her injuries were attended to. She will very likely recover.

LATER.

It seems that about dusk on Monday evening the victim, Miss Mabel Robson, was in her father's yard milking a cow, when John Lang drove by. Seeing Miss Robson he stopped his horse, and without getting out of his rig urged her to ride away with him and get married. This she refused to do. He then jumped from the buggy and said, "You will go with me or die." He held a razor in his hand, and with a razor he cut and slashed her. Fortunately, Miss Robson is a strong girl, and no vital spot was struck by the weapon. "Mabel, are you dead?" the girl, although still conscious, lay perfectly still, with her eyes closed. Her muscles twitched, and with the remark, "I'll out your head off," he half turned her over, and gave her a slash on the back of the neck. He then left her, and going to his own home he hid his father and mother and with a razor he cut and slashed her. He then went behind the house, and cut his throat from ear to ear, dying immediately.

Miss Robson is seventeen years old, and weighs in the neighborhood of two hundred and ten pounds. She has an exceedingly pretty face, and is quite an accomplished young lady. She never encountered the attention of Lang, and was in perfect dread of him, having threatened her last summer. John Lang was 33 years old, and lived with his father on the next farm to Robson's. The young lady will recover.

Doomed to Bachelorhood.

Friend—I say, Jack, why don't you marry, and settle down?

Jack—Can't.

You have a good income?

Yes.

And your aunt left you a charming house?

Yes.

Then why don't you hunt up a wife?

Oh, a wife is easy enough to get; that isn't the matter.

Then what is the matter?

I can't find a servant-girl.
